You know how the modern lobbyists operate in legislature or in Congress. They do not go up to Senator X or Senator Y and say, "Senator, won't you vote for my bill?" or "Won't you vote against the bill I dislike?" No. They go to the telephone and call up the local manager in your State, or in your county if you are in the legislature, and they tell him what they want him to do. Then he goes and sees the local newspaper editor, the local lawyer, the local banker, a few prominent businessmen, some local political character, and those people start showering you with telegrams. You read them and say, "I am astonished at the support there is back home for this measure, which I did not think perhaps my people would approve." That is the modern technique of lobbying, and this is the first time it has ever been successfully applied to a national political convention.

Mr. Willkie has already revealed in his speeches the attempted explanation for his change of position. He says, "I was a Democrat but I was against the power of exploitation. I saw huge private monopolies, I saw bureaucracies of private industry that were closing their grasp upon the economic throat of the people of America; I, a great liberal, fought those bureaucracies." But now there is a shift in the salient, and the argument now is, "As long as private enterprise was the champion of monopoly, the one who exercised unlimited power, I was on the side of the opposition." But now a new monster has arisen, a new Goliath, that threatens to destroy the liberties of our people. "Now private enterprise has been humbled, monopoly has been destroyed, industrial and financial bureaucracy has been obliterated, there is but one danger to the liberties of the people, and that is the bureaucracy which the people have created in their government."

One of the differences is that the people's government is elected, elected by the people, but the bureaucrats of industry and finance are not elected by the people. They do not go to the street corners as you and I do, as Members of the House of Representatives do, almost the way the President does, and speak to the people, looking them in the face, telling them what they propose to do and what they oppose. No, they get a fractional percentage of a large number of stockholders to back their leadership, and they elect a board of directors, and the board of directors elects a president and a chairman of the board, and that is the bureaucracy there is in the private oligrachy of finance.

Mr. President, the American people will have an opportunity to make up their minds about what kind of a policy of unity will appeal to the people of America.

I am even more concerned about one other phase of this matter. I was very much troubled to read in the New York Times of yesterday the following news article:

WEYGAND ACCUSED OF FAILING FRANCE—PETIT PARISIEN'S FORMER EDITOR SAYS GENERAL LED DEFEATISTS—RED ALARMS CITED

(By Elie J. Bois, former editor of the Petit Parisien)

LONDON, June 30.—At Tours on June 12 and 13 General Maxime Weygand told the discouraged French Cabinet of Allied armies in confusion and columns of refugees machine-gunned by the invaders. Then, referring to the Russian debacle of 1917 and the Soviet menace, he said, "We must not let it come to that."

This gave the defeatists in the Cabinet their chance to come forward, since the commander in chief not only justified but actually covered them. Didn't he tell them that, according to an admiralty report, there were riots in Paris and that Maurice Thorez, Communist leader, had occupied the Elysee Palace, the President's official residence?

George Mandel, the Minister of Interior, who had only just seen Chief of Police Langeron in Paris, at once denied the rumors so obligingly spread by General Weygand. Indeed, M. Mandel rang up M. Langeron on the telephone and succeeded in this way in reassuring the Cabinet, including President Albert Lebrun, that the President's bed in Elysee Palace was not being slept in by the Communist Thorez and that if the Germans advanced far enough to make an entry into Paris the next day they would find the city sad and deserted but quiet.

The courteous altercation between M. Mandel and General Weygand showed what was behind the suggestion of asking Chancellor Hitler for an armistice. General Weygand did not even attempt to hide it. He almost shouted that the battle was lost, the army more or less broken up, and that, since honor had been saved by him, the rest of the organized troops must be saved to maintain order and quiet in the country.

PÉTAIN HIS CHIEF SUPPORT

General Weygand's chief support was Premier Henri Philippe Pétain himself, who willingly confirmed everything General Weygand said. It is a mystery how the aged marshal could have staked his prestige on something that one day, when the ramifications have been laid bare, will turn out to have been the most questionable hoax in our history.

But it must be remembered that Marshal Pétain is past 80 years. He has all the clearness of mind of an octogenarian, but no more. It is no injustice to him to assume that his judgment is not as keen and quick as it used to be. The clouding over of his fine, blue, soldierly eyes, after even a slight effort, shows it clearly enough. His natural stubbornness has increased with age and he resents any opposition to his decisions. Attacked by some, flattered by others, he put all the weight of his popularity in favor of capitulation.

Behind Marshal Pétain and General Weygand are Paul Baudoin, Foreign Minister, and Camille Chautemps, Vice Premier, the latter carefully choosing his words to betray the ayes and noes into unanimity. He failed, but his specious arguments left some of his colleagues in doubt—sufficient for a majority at a tragic moment. The figureheads in the Cabinet think of nothing but of keeping their portfolios and their seats in Parliament. They would rather lose the war and be reelected than win the war and be out of office.

It has even been said that, while trying to save his face by a pretense of indomitable energy, Paul Reynaud, who was succeeded by Marshal Pétain as Premier, secretly favored the attitude of his followers. We should not believe a word of it, and we have proof to the contrary in the fact that he showed moments of weakness in private, which he would not have done if he had agreed, however little, with their personal views.

PROMISED TO FIGHT ON

I can still see M. Reynaud as he was on the afternoon of June 13 at the Tours Town Hall. I almost ran into him as he was coming out of the council chamber from the meeting at which Winston Churchill spoke so movingly. I merely said to Reynaud, "You are not going to capitulate?" To which he replied quickly, "Never! Never!"

"You will have a strong backing if you are for resistance at all costs," I said.

"Rest assured that I am," he answered.

M. Reynaud and France with him, fell a victim to his followers and collaborators, and he made several mistakes. His most serious mistake, into which he was probably led by one of his collaborators, was the publication of his message to President Roosevelt. This was so worded as to make him appear in a difficult position before his defeatists if the President of the United States did not at once declare war on Germany—a thing he could not do.

President Roosevelt went to the extreme limit of his powers in his reply; he left the future open and, if we understand him aright, the future is not for Germany, but for France and England.

One Frenchman fought with intelligence, stubbornness, and patriotism for faith to an ally and war to the end for the honor of France. He had no time to eat and hardly any to sleep from morning till night. He animated the discouraged, inspired the brave, and shamed the weak. He downed every poor argument; he forestalled all maneuvers.

When General Weygand pleaded for capitulation, he replied: "You may take the responsibility for it as commander in chief, but it will not move the Government any more than the capitulation of Bazaine prevented Gambetta from going to Tours." (Marshal François Bazaine surrendered Metz to the Germans on October 27, 1870, when Léon Gambetta was Premier, and was later court-martialed and imprisoned.)

To M. Chautemps, who wanted Prime Minister Churchill to give the Cabinet a release for a separate peace, this brave Frenchman replied: "It is not done. We must honor our undertaking."

Those who whined, "Where shall be go? All France will be occupied," were told: "There is a French empire—Algiers, Morocco, Tunisia. France is where the Government is. There is a colonial army; there is England, who will not yield; there is America, who cannot avoid sooner or later coming to help France and England. England and America will win the war with us or without us. I want it to be with us. If we capitulate, the war will continue just the same on and over French territory. You will not gain peace by surrendering, but will have lost your honor."

In these historic days this man was the soul of France. Georges Mandel showed himself to be the true spiritual son of Clemenceau—the Clemenceau of 1918, who won the war because, when Paris was threatened in 1918 and the whole front seemed to crumble, he shouted, "I shall keep on fighting."

M. Mandel followed in his footsteps when he said to the defeatists at a Cabinet meeting, "I am surprised to hear of capitulation from Ministers newly appointed to strengthen the war Cabinet."

IMPOSSIBLE AT BORDEAUX

The cause which, with a little luck, might have been won at Tours could no longer be won at Bordeaux, which swarmed with politicians who, to quote one of them, "preferred kicks to bullets." M. Mandel might have won had not the plotters exploited his "non-Aryan" origin, in spite of his obvious patriotism. He might have won if he had been Premier, for he would not have made some of Reynaud's honorable mistakes and would not have tolerated any insolent intrigues around him.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks an article in the New York Times, headed "Laval seen aiding French Nazis' rule."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAVAL SEEN AIDING FRENCH NAZIS' RULE—FORMER PREMIER IS EXPECTED TO ADOPT ANTICAPITALIST LINE TO FORM NEW REGIME

(By George Axelsson)

PARIS, June 29.—Wednesday evening Parisians learned for the first time the armistice conditions imposed by Germany. The newspaper Paris-Soir published the first six paragraphs, prefacing them as follows:

"Anxious to inform readers as rapidly as possible, we hasten to communicate the first paragraphs on the agreements covering the Franco-German armistice. With the approval of the German censorship, we will in the next edition publish the total agreement."

In the six introductory clauses of the agreement those Frenchmen who want to see the bright side of things and the possibility of reconstruction point to paragraph 5, which stipulated that Germany does not intend to maintain her occupation of the western coast of France after the end of hostilities against Britain and to fix its own seat. If France moved the capital back to Paris the Germans promise to facilitate communications with all parts of France.

"What next, France?" is the question confronting Frenchmen here who worry about the country's political future. Political circles, who now abound with those who say, "I told you so," more or less declare that France was bound downward after 1934.

Typical of this opinion is Michel Gorel, former Paris Midi writer, who predicts the formation of a French national socialist government minus an Aryan plank. This government would be founded by Adrian Marquet, who with Pierre Laval leads the new Bordeaux government; Marcel Deat, and the French Social Party under Col. François de la Rocque.

M. Gorel says he can reveal that M. Laval, during the European voyage of Sumner Welles, United States Under Secretary of State, tried to bring about a compromise peace. Following is what M. Laval is supposed to have told Edouard Daladier, then Foreign Minister and Premier:

"You have uselessly irritated Russia by promising support to Finland, but you could not prevent the Finnish defeat. You drove Italy into Germany's arms. The French Army is demoralized, the blockage is a myth, and the British Empire will be slow to get under way. We must make peace."

M. Daladier was finally ousted, according to M. Gorel, because of a plot against him by Paul Reynaud and Leon Blum.

M. Laval is supposed to have promised mediation by his intimate friend, Premier Mussolini, with whom he remained in close contact throughout the winter. Together they are supposed to have created the slogan, "A white peace to offset the 'red' danger," which is said to have found much resonance in capitalist and rightist circles.

Although striving for this type of peace, M. Laval is said to have observed interestedly scattered efforts by certain circles looking toward the establishment of French fascism, definitely anticapitalist and much advanced as to social legislation.

REPORTED BID TO REDS

To achieve his end of "saving France from herself," M. Laval, as reported by M. Gorel, sought every means to return to power, including that of making advances to Communists, saying: "It is I who signed in April 1935, the Franco-Soviet pact and it is once more I who will reknit friendly relations between Paris and Moscow."

M. Gorel predicts M. Laval will meet the new situation by making an anticapitalist policy and will support the French National Socialism that military defeat has placed in the forefront and which has yet to find a doctrine and methods.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have incorporated as a part of my remarks an article on page L–29 of the June 30 issue of the New York Times, headed "Labor chief urges Chamberlain to go."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LABOR CHIEF URGES CHAMBERLAIN TO GO—STRABOLGI, LEADER IN HOUSE OF LORDS, ASKS HALIFAX AND HOARE ALSO TO RESIGN—HITS APPEASEMENT LINK—THEIR QUITTING OF POSTS WOULD AID CAUSE FOR WHICH BRITAIN IS FIGHTING, HE ASSERTS

(By Raymond Daniell)

LONDON, June 29.—Baron Strabolgi, Labor leader in the House of Lords, in an open letter tonight called on Neville Chamberlain, Lord President of the Council; Viscount Halifax, the Foreign Minister; and Sir Samuel Hoare, now Ambassador to Spain, to resign their offices as a service to the country and "the cause for which we are fighting."

Lord Strabolgi's letter, addressed to British editors, was prompted by an interview given yesterday by Mr. Chamberlain, former Prime Minister, in which he denied that he favored opening peace negotiations with Germany.

Lord Strabolgi, who as Lt. Comdr. J. M. Kenworthy was a frequent Labor spokesman in the House of Commons, said that he did not question Mr. Chamberlain's denial; but he declared it would not have been necessary for the former Prime Minister to make one if his earlier policy of appeasement had not provided so much basis for suspicion abroad.

TEXT OF STRABOLGI LETTER

The letter by Lord Strabolgi read:

"Mr. Neville Chamberlain has found it necessary to give an interview to the American press denying that he is in favor of asking Germany for peace negotiations.

"We can accept Mr. Chamberlain's word, especially as we know of his anger at Hitler's double-crossing over the Munich agreement when he invaded Czechoslovakia in March of last year. We also appreciate Lord Hallifax's moral indignation at the Nazi enormities.

"Unfortunately, the past of these two statesmen is so identified with the appeasement policy that, so long as they are in the inner war Cabinet, the German propagandists will find credence for their fairy tales about Britain suing for an armistice.

"The presence of Sir Samuel Hoare, with his past record and association with Mr. Laval (former Premier and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, of France, who joined with Sir Samuel when the latter was British Foreign Secretary, in 1935, in an Ethiopian proposal to Italy), as British Ambassador in Madrid, also lends color to these deliberately circulated rumors.

"The effect is most serious in the two most important neutral countries in the world—the United States of America and Russia.

"If Messrs. Chamberlain, Halifax, and Hoare could see their way to retire for a space from public life it would be the greatest service they could do to their country, and to the cause for which we are fighting, and an act of high patriotism."

WROTE ON JUNE 10 OF "UNEASINESS"

LONDON, June 29.—Lord Strabolgi's letter today recalled the fact that, on June 10, he wrote in the Times, of London, that Parliament reflected the "uneasiness in the country at the continuance in high office of men primarily responsible for the present state of affairs."

"Those of use who are trying to sustain public morale in these difficult times would be greatly assisted if this cause of criticism and complaint were removed," he added then, in an article that mentioned no names.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have read those articles and referred to them, because even in France, when France was threatened with dissolution, there existed the champions of appeasement, and those champions were in the Government of France itself. They followed the same policy which manifested itself in other ways, opening doors of fortresses to the enemy, letting bridges remain intact so that the enemy might pass over them without a single obstacle.

I now come to an astonishing quotation. In Dorothy Thompson's column in the New York Herald Tribune of June 29, 1940, I read these words—and they are not about France, they are not about Great Britain's appeasers—they are a warning to Mr. Wendell Willkie about his own advisers who are suspected of leading him to the adoption of a policy of appeasement for the United States of America.

Dorothy Thompson, as every Senator knows, has almost shrieked for Wendell Willkie. She has almost regarded him as a God's annointed in the political arena. So she is no critic, but a friend of the nominee of the Republican Party. Here is what Dorothy Thompson says about Wendell Willkie:

But they will make it hard for you, Wendell Willkie.

Who will? These people who gave Wendell Willkie the nomination. These people who are his confidants. These people who are his business and political associates. So Dorothy Thompson says to Wendell Willkie:

But they will make it hard for you, Wendell Willkie. The men who want to defeat something or other more than they want to save America.

Defeat whom? Could it be that there is anyone in America who would rather defeat Franklin D. Roosevelt than to prepare America? I am reading what Dorothy Thompson said, Mr. President, not what I have said:

The men who are bringing the faceless ones into our midst. They are all for you, now, Wendell Willkie—the men who hold up the Christian cross and make it into a symbol of fear! The men who marry the cross to the swastika, in unholy union. They speak in the name of Jesus of Nazareth and plan His crucifixion.

They do not read the words of the One whose name they take in vain. They do not remember that He said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Do not let them make your standard into a standard of terror and fear, Wendell Willkie.

Then she adds:

We have great hopes of you.

So I rose primarily today, Mr. President, to say that the American people also have great hopes of Wendell Willkie. They hope he will not succumb to the wily companions who would like to make peace with Hitlerism because it might save something they do not want to jeopardize. It might save a business, it might save profits, it might save prestige for them not to have to incur the enmity of Adolf Hitler. At least Dorothy Thompson says:

Wendell Willkie, they are all with you now.

I say the American people are not thinking in terms of partisanship. They are expecting Wendell Willkie not to become an evading politican, not a quibbling nominee, not a side-stepping candidate—they expect Wendell Willkie, out of the courage that he has been portrayed as having, to stand up on his own hind legs, without his arms being held up by Mr. Anybody, and say—

People of America, I denounce Adolf Hitler and his policies!

That is one of the things I mean when I say, I will to preserve the American way of life and the democratic way.

Let Wendell Willkie say, "My fellow Americans, under the solemn consciousness of the position I hold, I say that I favor aid short of war to the Allies."

Has Wendell Willkie said that since he has been nominated? Did he give any comfort to the isolationists at Philadelphia? Why was it the only clear-cut statement he has made was made before the convention, and not afterward? What compromises of policy did he have to make to get that nomination? Is it not rather strange that he is now off on a yacht with Roy Howard, or in smoke-filled rooms with political leaders, trying to make up his mind as to what he should say about foreign policy?

Mr. President, is that that bold knight who came out of the business world upon a magic charger to lead the people of his country over the hills into the green valley of the most glorious future they have ever had? Men on horseback—the Hitlers and the Mussolinis and Stalins and the great of every generation—do not make up their minds off on somebody else's yacht, or conferring with a few political leaders about a solemn policy that means more than everything else to their country and the kind of a world their country loves. They do not ask others; they tell others.

So, in the name of people who respect the intellectual honesty of Wendell Willkie, who respect his courage, who respect his patriotism, and believe in their hearts that he puts America above his own election—they the people of America expect Wendell Willkie now to come out and say, in English that is understandable by the man on the street, what he thinks America's foreign policy should be tomorrow, and next week, and next month, and next year, and in the days that lie so challengingly ahead of the country and Congress.

We will see in a few days how bold Mr. Willkie is, how patriotic he is, how courageous he is. We will see whether or not these champions of appeasement have had their way with him.

Must I read the Scripps-Howard newspapers to see what Roy Howard thinks about foreign policy before I know what Wendell Willkie thinks? Must I consult the champions of Wall Street to see whether they favor appeasement in order to know whether Wendell Willkie favors it or not?

I say to Mr. Wendell Willkie—and as it has not been so long since he was a Democrat, perhaps he would not resent a little counsel from a Democrat—I say to Mr. Wendell Willkie that the one way that he may challenge and receive the admiration of the American people is to show them that he is a statesman and a leader, that he does think enough of the American way of life to be willing, if necessary, to sacrifice his own political fortune for it.

Of course, the Presidency is a high prize. Of course, men will sell their souls for it, as they have nearly always sold their souls for power. But, Mr. President, I may recite an interview that I learned about recently from what I believe is a reliable source.

Stanley Baldwin was speaking to some people at Geneva. He made to that group the statement that if, in the election of, I believe, 1937—the last election in which he participated—he had told the truth about the dangers from Germany, if he had challenged and demanded that Great Britain subordinate everything else to the defense of that island, that he could not have won the election because the British sentiment at that time had not been worked up to that point of view.

Stanley Baldwin may have won an election and lost the British Empire. I think that history will judge sternly with a man who makes that kind of a selfish statement.

Was Wendell Willkie nominated upon the wave of popular enthusiasm? Does he come straight from the heart of the people? Is he worthy of being the people's leader? In the next few days he will indicate whether or not he is to add to a background of 23 Wall Street, to a coat of arms, bearing the electric meter and the ticker tape—another symbol that has come to mean to the consciousness of the world, mourning—mourning for destroyed people, mourning for fallen governments, mourning for broken traditions, mourning for lost glory—the somber figure of a black umbrella—the umbrella under which another businessman from Birmingham, England, another champion of business enterprise, led the democracies of the world down, down, down into the dungeons of despair if not of dissolution and permanent destruction.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, several Senators who are directly interested in this matter, and who are unavoidably absent from Washington, have requested that it go over until the next meeting of the Senate. I therefore ask that the conference report go over, and remain the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate the bill (S. 4161) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, was passed. The House passed a similar bill—in fact, textually the same—which came to the Senate a few moments after the Senate bill had been passed. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sentaor from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10106. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10106) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, which was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article III of title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, is amended by adding after section 14 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 15. Credits, securities, and other intangible personal property within the District not employed in carrying on any business therein by the owner shall be deemed to be located at the domicile of the owner for purposes of taxation under this title, and, if held in trust, shall not be deemed to be located in the District for purposes of taxation under this title solely because of the trustee being domiciled in the District: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to property owned by alien decedents, and that nothing herein contained shall affect the taxation by the District of any property owned by alien decedents which, at the time of the death of such decedents, shall be under the jurisdiction of the District or over which the District has control."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I assume, of course, that the House will disregard the Senate bill, inasmuch as we have passed the House bill, which is textually the same.

SECRETARY LANSING'S VIEWS ON PARTICIPATION IN WORLD WAR

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement prepared by me concerning the views of the then Secretary of State, Hon. Mr. Lansing, on the entry of the United States into the World War in 1917.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HOLT

The writings of Robert Lansing are interesting to compare with present-day happenings.

As Secretary of State he had charge of the foreign affairs of the United States. We were repeatedly told that the United States would stay out of the World War of 1914–18. "He kept us out of war" echoed throughout the country in 1916. Assurances had been made that we would not be involved in the conflict. After the damage had been done, the story of the involvement was made public. Is that policy being duplicated today?

The facts show not only from Lansing's statements but from many other sources that the process to get us in that conflict had been going on for a long period of time while the people were told that "No one wants to enter the war." Today certain Government officials are telling the people that they are not for going to war, not for intervention, not for involvement. Their official acts show to the contrary. Shall their memoirs be a duplication of those shown after the World War?

Shall the boys be killed, wounded, shell shocked, and destroyed—and then we find that behind the scenes commitments had been made, assurances had been given that we were to enter?

The words of Secretary of State Lansing show the story of 1914–17. Read them and compare with 1939–40. They follow:

"The effect upon me personally of the inhumanity of the Germans in their conduct of submarine warfare had been such as to remove any doubt that I had previously held that sooner or later the United States would be forced to enter the war on the side of the Allies, for it seemed certain at that time that the German Government had no intention of abandoning its lawless methods, whatever civilized nations might think of its conduct. Though convinced of this, I believed that it was unwise to attempt to obtain from Congress a declaration of war until American public opinion was practically unanimous in demanding such action. While it was hard to await the slow process of complete conversion to the cause of the Allies and to a right appreciation of the menace to human liberty in the possibility of a triumphant Germany, which then seemed more remote than in the autumn of 1914, there was no other course for the administration to take, even though it aroused bitter criticism in many quarters.

"It seemed to me that anyone who had followed the course of events since August 1914 and analyzed with impartiality the purposes of the German Government as evidenced by its acts and utterances could really have little doubt as to the result, or the part the United States would ultimately be compelled to take in the struggle for world supremacy. I felt sure in my own mind, but I did not find that the same certainty existed in the minds of all my associates in the Government. Several of them hoped, and I think believed, that the United States would not be drawn into the conflict. The President certainly cherished this hope as was indicated in his adherence to a strict neutrality when facts justified its abandonment, and also in his subsequent efforts to become an impartial mediator for the purpose of restoring peace between the belligerents before a military decision had been reached.

"This disposition of some of the chief officials of the administration was even more general and more evident among leading Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, who were emphatically in support of our continuing neutral. Thus, the open announcement that the foreign policies of the administration would be based on the presumption that the United States would finally declare war against Germany would have been a serious mistake, if the President had been won over to that course of action, which I am sure he could not have been in the summer of 1915, or at any time prior to March 1917.

"Having, however, the settled conviction that eventually this country would enter the war on the side of the Allies, I prepared for my own guidance a memorandum as to our foreign policies based on the hypothesis that the United States would join in the conflict against the Central Powers. That memorandum shows what was in my mind during the preparation of the reply to the German note of July 8 regarding the Lusitania case, and it will explain certain other official acts in connection with our foreign affairs.

"The memorandum, which is entitled 'Consideration and Outline of Policies,' is dated July 11, 1915, and reads as follows:

"MEMORANDUM OF SECRETARY LANSING

"'I have come to the conclusion that the German Government is utterly hostile to all nations with democratic institutions because those who compose it see in democracy a menace to absolutism and the defeat of the German ambition for world domination. Everywhere German agents are plotting and intriguing to accomplish the supreme purpose of their Government.

"'Only recently has the conviction come to me that democracy throughout the world is threatened. Suspicions of the vaguest sort only a few months ago have been more and more confirmed. From many sources evidence has been coming until it would be folly to close one's eyes to it.

"'German agents have undoubtedly been at work in Mexico arousing anti-American feeling and holding out false hopes of support. The proof is not conclusive but is sufficient to compel belief. Germans also appear to be operating in Haiti and San Domingo and are probably doing so in other Latin American republics.

"'I think that this is being done so that this Nation will have troubles in America and be unable to take part in the European war if a repetition of such outrages as the Lusitania sinking should require us to act. It may even go further and have in mind the possibility of a future war with this Republic in case the Allies should be defeated.

"'In these circumstances, the policies we adopt are vital to the future of the United States and, I firmly believe, to the welfare of mankind, for I see in the perpetuation of democracy the only hope of universal peace and progress for the world. Today, German absolutism is the great menace to democracy.

"'I think that we should, therefore, adopt the following for the present and pursue these policies until conditions materially change:

"'1. The settlement, for the time being at least, of the present submarine controversy because the American people are still much divided on the merits of the war. As it progresses, I believe that the real objects of the German Government will be disclosed and there will be united opposition. Meanwhile, we should get ready to meet the worst.

"'2. A rigorous and continuing prosecution of all plots in this country and a vigilant watch on Germans and their activities here.

"'3. Secret investigation of German activities in Latin America, particularly Mexico, and the adoption of means to frustrate them.

"'4. The cultivation of a Pan American doctrine with the object of alienating the American republics from European influence, especially the German influence.

"'5. The maintenance of friendly relations with Mexico. To do this it will be necessary to recognize Carranza's faction, which seems to be the stronger. Union with the other American republics will have a good effect upon them.

"'6. The purchase of the Danish West Indies as soon and as secretly as possible, because Germany may conquer Denmark and come in that way into legal title. If Denmark believes that Germany covets the islands she will sell to us and prevent their possession being a menace to Danish independence. The Danish Government must be told this.

"'7. The prevention by all means in our power of German influence becoming dominant in any nation bordering the Caribbean or near the Panama Canal. In this connection, we should settle in some way with Colombia, for the Germans are particularly active there.

"'8. The actual participation of this country in the war in case it becomes evident that Germany will be the victor. A triumph for German imperialism must not be. We ought to look forward to this possibility and make ready to meet it.'

"There is a future possibility which does not change the foregoing policies but which emphasizes the last one. It is that the war may end in a draw or with the German Empire dominant over its enemies.

"The argument could then be made by the German Government that, in spite of the fact that the world was arrayed against it, it succeeded in preventing the defeat of the Empire, and that having thus proved its superior efficiency, it should be continued and supported as the agency best fitted to restore the German Nation to a state of prosperity.

"I believe that this argument would be potent with the German people, who are in the habit of unquestioning obedience to their rulers in thought as well as action. Of course, the terrible cost of war, when the time to consider that arrives, will weaken the argument, for the people will ask, What is the recompense for the great sacrifices they have made, the great suffering which they have endured, and the Government will have nothing to show? The nation may then rise and demand a change to a political system in which their voice will be supreme. But if the argument should prevail and the present military oligarchy be perpetuated, then what?

"My judgment is that the German Government, cherishing the same ambition of world power which now possesses it, would, with its usual vigor and thoroughness, prepare to renew its attack on democracy. I think, however, that it would not pursue the course taken in this war, which has failed, because it would realize that the democratic nations would be more watchful and less trustful and better prepared to resist. It would probably endeavor to sow dissensions among the nations with liberal institutions and seek an alliance with other governments based to a more or less degree on the principle of absolutism.

"The remedy seems to me to be plain. It is that Germany must not be permitted to win this war or to break even, though to prevent it this country is forced to take an active part. This ultimate necessity must be constantly in our minds in all our controversies with the belligerents. American public opinion must be prepared for the time, which may come, when we will have to cast aside our neutrality and become one of the champions of democracy.

"THEY CLUNG TO WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

"While my personal views as to the ultimate position of the United States were thus clear, the time was not ripe to take definite action. The opposition to entering the war on the side of the Allies was strong in 1915 in spite of the Lusitania affair. It came from several elements of the population, which were inspired by different motives and influenced by different reasons. Of these, the largest body were undoubtedly Americans who thought that the war was not our affair but a European quarrel with which we had nothing to do. They had not reasoned out the underlying principles at stake, nor were they disposed to consider them as important. They could see no reason for the United States becoming involved in what they believed did not concern this country. They clung tenaciously to the traditional policy of aloofness from European questions as they interpreted the words of Washington's Farewell Address.

"Among other groups of citizens who opposed the entrance of the United States into the war were the bulk of the naturalized citizens of German and Austrian extraction and many Americans of German and Austrian descent, together with the Irish-Americans who sympathized with those who were striving to free Ireland from British domination. Then there were also the Americans whose business and commercial enterprises were affected by the activities of the British Navy. These saw their expectations of large profits waning. To these groups should be added the pacifists, who were opposed to all war out of principle, and, though this group was not numerous, it was sincere almost to the point of fanaticism in its opposition, and carried on a vigorous propaganda against the idea of the United States in any way participating in the conflict.

"ATTACKS SCHOOL BOOKS

"There was also an influence which affected unconsciously many Americans in their sympathy toward the belligerents and caused them to hesitate in giving approval to the United States joining the Allies. This influence was a product of the textbooks used in teaching American history to the youth of the land. Unavoidably there was implanted in the minds of the student in our public schools the idea that England was our hereditary foe. Our two principal foreign wars, that for independence and that of 1812, were waged against Great Britain. These two conflicts were emphasized in our school histories and embellished with numerous anecdotes illustrating American patriotism and valor, while the unrighteousness of the British Government in causing our people to take up arms in defense of their rights was bitterly denounced. The general consequence of the feeling thus engendered was to keep alive a spirit of antagonism toward the British Empire and an unwillingness to join with it in any enterprise of a political or military nature. While studious Americans knew that this attitude of mind was unreasonable in view of the new conditions which prevailed and of the ties of blood and common language, the prejudice of childhood and the traditions handed down from generation to generation were not easily cast aside or forgotten. They unquestionably weakened American sympathy toward the Allies, though their influence was offset in no small degree by the time-honored friendship for France, whose timely aid with troops, ships, and money during the American Revolution was also given a prominent place in textbooks.

"A GRADUAL PROCESS OF EDUCATION FOR WAR

"Many Americans were deeply incensed at the interference of Great Britain with our sea-borne commerce and with the detentions and seizures by British naval ships of American vessels and cargoes destined to neutral ports. Under the accepted rules of international law these detentions and seizures were illegal and indefensible, as were the lists of contraband issued from time to time by the British Government, which included numerous commodities lacking entirely in the qualities which are usually supposed to impress articles with contraband character. Many more Americans were directly affected by these British practices than were affected by the activities of the German submarines.

"Thus, while I was convinced that this country would ultimately become a belligerent because of the peril to the world if autocratic Germany were victor, and while my ideas as to foreign policies were based upon this conviction, I, like some other believers in active support of the cause of the Allies, realized that the sensible thing to do was to defer action until, by a gradual process of education and enlightenment, the American people had been brought to a full understanding of the design of the German Government to become overlord of the World.

"In writing to the President on July 14, 1915, concerning our answer to the German note of the 8th, I commented thus on American public opinion at that time:

"As I read the state of mind of the majority of the people, it is that they do not want war, that no war spirit exists, but at the same time they want the Government not to recede a step from its position but to compel Germany to submit to our demands. Of course this attitude, if I read it aright, is most difficult to meet. To carry out both ideas is well-nigh impossible.

"GETTING THE PEOPLE READY

"Yet it was this problem which the Government had to face. There was only one solution possible, and that was delay.

"Judgment as to the wisdom of delay until the temper of the people had changed was confirmed as time passed. The majority of my callers during the summer and autumn of 1915, and for many months after that time, Senators, Representatives, and men high in financial and business circles, frankly said that they were against war, or else stated that, though they favored it, the bulk of the people with whom they came in contact were opposed to it. Even in December 1916, a year and a half after the sinking of the Lusitania, when other submarine outrages had been added to the long score against Germany, one of the most prominent and influential of the Democratic leaders in the House of Representatives, Henry D. Flood, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, said that he had quietly made a personal canvass of the House, and that there was unquestionably a majority opposed to a declaration of war against Germany. He himself, he said, favored a declaration but was not in favor of attempting to obtain it until it was certain of passage by a decisive vote. He said, in commenting further on the situation, that he believed that Congress was gradually becoming convinced that this was unavoidable, but that it would not abandon hope of keeping this country out of the struggle until the President's efforts as a peacemaker proved of no avail.

"If such was the situation at the Capitol in December 1916, 6 weeks after Mr. Wilson's reelection as President when the campaign cry, 'He kept us out of war,' had been so potent, the passage of a declaration of war against Germany in the summer of 1915 was certainly impossible, for the war feeling was then much weaker. To have attempted it and to have failed would have been an irreparable disaster to the cause of the Allies. In fact, it might have been America's final decision, for it would have discouraged those who were seeking to arouse the people to the true meaning of the war. What then would have been the consequences? Would the Allied Powers have triumphed in the war? The whole course of history might have been changed if President Wilson had attempted and failed to obtain a declaration of war against the German Empire soon after the Lusitania disaster. The uncertainty of the result was too great to warrant the attempt, and Mr. Wilson wisely adopted a policy of delay which also accorded with his declared hopes of restoring peace.

"TWO YEARS TO EDUCATE THE PEOPLE FOR WAR

"As the submarine controversy progressed and the attitude of the public mind was disclosed, the wisdom of the President's policy of delay was confirmed. It became more and more evident to those in the administration who were friendly to the Allies that it was necessary before definite action was taken to convince the people of the evil nature of the German Government's aims and of the menace of those aims to our own national safety as well as to the principles of democracy, in the maintenance of which the United States was vitally interested. It was a long, slow process, the process of enlightenment. It covered a period of almost 2 years. It might have failed even then but for the crass stupidity of the Germans in declaring their purpose of renewing unrestricted submarine warfare on February 1, 1917, in later attacking and sinking American merchant ships, and, finally, in attempting to induce Mexico to make war upon the United States in the event that we declared war against Germany. The German Admiralty's obstinacy in refusing to heed the admonitions of Count von Bernstorff as to the fateful consequences of renewed submarine warfare and the folly of the German Secretary of Foreign Affairs in directing the German Minister in Mexico to propose to that country that if the United States entered the war she should invade her northern neighbor, offering as a bribe the return of the territory which the Mexican Republic had lost in the war of 1848, turned the scale, and the American people, with only a few opposing voices, demanded a declaration of war against a government which was plotting secretly to involve this country in a conflict with the Latin-American republic across the Rio Grande.

"It was difficult to restrain one's feelings and to conduct a dispassionate correspondence with the German Government concerning the Lusitania affair when nature revolted at the callousness of the perpetrators of the crime and of the officials who so unhesitatingly defended the act. Expressions of good will and courteous phrases seemed very much out of place. To conduct such a correspondence was all the harder for me, in view of my sympathy with the Allies and of my steadfast conviction that their cause was in truth the cause of all liberty-loving peoples throughout the world. Satisfied, however, that the preponderance of public opinion in the United States, or at least a very large majority of the people, favored a continuance of neutrality and the avoidance of a rupture of diplomatic relations with Germany, there was no other course to take. Though it was hostile to one's natural inclinations, notes had to be written and interviews held without exhibiting in any way the real repugnance one felt toward those who attempted to justify inhumanity and crime. How much more satisfying it would have been to have denounced the whole wicked business, to have sent Bernstorff home, and to have declared war against the government which was the instigator and defender of the barbarous outrages."

EDUCATING THE PEOPLE FOR WAR—1940?

Raymond Moley, former close confidant to President Roosevelt, and official of the Department of State, writes in his book, After Seven Years, a book which will be read by future historians as a valuable contribution to the story of the present administration:

"Observers recognized in these dramatic maneuverings signs of a State Department campaign to educate the American public to the need for a stronger foreign policy."

Compare the use of the word "educate" to the statement of Secretary Lansing made in January 1916, 15 months before our entrance in that war:

"Public opinion is not yet ready to accept this point of view. The American people will have to be educated to a true vision of the menace that Germany is to liberty and democracy in America as well as in Europe."

Yes; even in 1915 Secretary Lansing had used the word "educate." He wrote:

"I, like some other believers in active support of the cause of the Allies, realized that the sensible thing to do was to defer action until, by a gradual process of education and enlightenment, the American people had been brought to a full understanding of the design of the German Government to become overlord of the world."

Also note the comparison of the phrase "like some other believers in active support of the cause of the Allies," and then compare it with the statements of the same viewpoint as expressed by the active supporters such as the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies and individuals connected with that organization. Are they hopeful in 1940 that the American people would be educated and enlightened as did Secretary Lansing in 1915?

Their policy—that is the policy of most of them—is to say they are against going to war but they want acts of the United States Government that are provocative of war and in some instances acts that are acts of war.

Secretary Lansing waited until the people were convinced, as shown by the statement made in 1916:

"I believe, therefore, that for the present we must endeavor to keep out of the war and avoid, if we can, being forced by German aggressions to employ severe measures. We must be patient and endure indignities and injustice until the people of this country realize that the German Government is the inveterate foe of all the ideals we hold sacred and for which the Republic stands. When the mass of our people are convinced of the real character of the German Government and are awake to its sinister designs, the time for action will have arrived. We must wait patiently for that day and not act before if action can possibly be avoided."

PROTESTS TO ENGLAND FOR HOME CONSUMPTION

It is also interesting to compare the Lansing words with recent events as they pertain to Anglo-American relations. Secretary Lansing wrote:

"Sympathetic as I felt toward the Allies and convinced that we would in the end join with them against the autogratic governments of the Central Empires, I saw with apprehension the tide of resentment against Great Britain rising higher and higher in this country. It was becoming increasingly difficult to avoid bringing the controversies between our two Governments to a head and to keep from assuming positions which went beyond the field of discussion. I did all that I could to prolong the disputes by preparing, or having prepared, long and detailed replies, and before the extended interchange of arguments came to an end something would happen to change the current of American public opinion or make the American people perceive that German absolutism was a menace to their liberties and to democratic institutions everywhere. Fortunately this hope and effort were not in vain.

* * * * * * *

"I have already mentioned that in dealing with the British Government there was always in my mind the conviction that we would ultimately become an ally of Great Britain and that it would not do, therefore, to let our controversies reach a point where diplomatic correspondence gave place to action. There was another reason for prolonging discussion and avoiding too rigid an attitude, a reason which grew out of the same conviction, and of which I often thought as I studied the correspondence. On more than one occasion I felt concerned lest we had gone too far when it looked as if the positions assumed by us were closing the door to further discussion.

* * * * * * *

"If my conviction was right as to the United States' entry into the war—and I never doubted it after the sinking of the Lusitania—it was of the highest importance that we should not become a belligerent with our hands too tightly tied by what we had written. We would presumably wish to adopt some of the policies and practices which the British had adopted, though certainly not all of them, for our object would be the same as theirs, and that was to break the power of Germany and destroy the morale of the German people by an economic isolation, which would cause them to lack the very necessaries of life. If we went too far in insisting that Great Britain must cease certain practices as violative of our neutral rights, our utterances would certainly be cited against us by other neutrals if we, as belligerents, attempted to do the same thing. While our conduct might be illegal, we would not be flagrantly inconsistent.

* * * * * * *

"That reason was never lost sight of during the correspondence which passed between the two Governments concerning the British restraints upon American trade. The notes that were sent were long and exhaustive treatises which opened up new subjects of discussion rather than closing those in controversy. Short and emphatic notes were dangerous. Everything was submerged in verbosity. It was done with deliberate purpose. It insured continuance of the controversies and left the questions unsettled, which was necessary in order to leave this country free to act and even to act illegally when it entered the war."

Check Secretary Lansing's statement as to arguments with Great Britain and then compare with the following:

First. A statement in the New York Times in February by Edwin James, managing editor:

"In some quarters the belief is expressed that this very favoritism [for the Allies], at times made so plain by the President, is the cause of the vigorous correspondence. This theory is that by continued public emphasis on our complaints against British policy, the administration sought to disarm criticisms that it is unneutral and openly favoring one side in the war."

Second. A statement in Newsweek, a paper that has a close personal tie-up with the President through one of its able writers:

"The protests to Britain are chiefly for the home consumption of indignant American citizens."

Third. The newspaper stories of February 1940, in which it is stated that the strong representations to Great Britain would be stopped because of the fear of generation of anti-Ally feeling.

More could be added, but these are significant enough to point to the conclusion.

THE ALLIES MUST NOT BE BEATEN

Compare the statements today with this:

"The Allies must not be beaten. It would mean the triumph of autocracy over democracy, the shattering of all our moral standards, and a real, though it may seem remote, peril to our independence and institutions."

This statement was made the year before our entrance in the 1914–17 World War by Lansing.

One Government official has spoken of "Hitler and his gang of barbarians." Compare that with Lansing's wish:

"While I claim no prophetic vision, I believe that I can declare that by this time next year Americans will be killing those German barbarians or at least getting ready to do their part in this war against the Kaiser and his military gang who rule over Germany."

"I HATE WAR"

In the closing words of the radio address of President Roosevelt, delivered September 3, 1939, one finds:

"Even a neutral has a right to take account of facts. Even a neutral cannot be asked to close his mind or his conscience.

"I have said not once but many times that I have seen war and that I hate war."

Secretary Lansing, preceding our entrance in the war in 1917, said:

"I hate the horrors of war but I hate worse the horrors of German mastery."

Many comparisons with the President's statements and those of Secretary Lansing will show almost identical language.

DEADLY PARALLEL

Shall the terrible story of 1917 be repeated?

Shall the memoirs of the future show the same things as shown by the Lansing papers?

Let us bring to light these secrets.

Arthur Krock wrote:

"The President not even yet is saying openly what he has said to individuals and committees of Congress."

I recall the President saying in a radio speech to the people these words:

"Your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you."

A recent book, War Propaganda in the United States, says:

"Mr. Roosevelt's precise thoughts as peace ebbed away are the property of future explorers. They are concealed in memoirs 'Not to be opened now.' "

Hartley Grattan has written a book, Deadly Parallel. I fear so.

What America wants is:
First. A strong national defense.
Second. No secret understandings or agreements with foreign nations.
Third. Less provocative incidents on the part of Government officials.
Fourth. The preservation of the Monroe Doctrine, of the principles of Washington's Farewell Address.
The boys who have to die have a right to know the reasons. They have a right to know about these secrets, these things kept for memoirs under the notation "Not to be opened now."
We want no more Lansing memoranda kept secret until after the fatal step has been taken.

GRADUATED EXCESS-PROFITS TAX (H. DOC. NO. 854)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

We are engaged in a great national effort to build up our national defenses to meet any and every potential attack.

We are asking even our humblest citizens to contribute their mite.

It is our duty to see that the burden is equitably distributed according to ability to pay so that a few do not gain from the sacrifices of the many.

I therefore recommend to the Congress the enactment of a steeply graduated excess-profits tax, to be applied to all individuals and all corporate organizations without discrimination.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend John W. Rustin, D. D., pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of us all, high above us and yet living in each one of us, our hearts are filled with infinite gratitude to Thee for Thy goodness to us.

While Thou art very great, still art Thou very near to us. Lift us into a new sense of life's meaning and dignity. Little are we, O God, and transient children of the day against the vast background of Thine eternity. Yet is this greatness ours, that Thou canst be released through us into the world. Grant us this dignity. Make us channels of Thy peace. Let the divine be released through us among men.

Bless, we pray Thee, our Nation and her leaders. In this hour when men are confused, perplexed, and uncertain, give us a calmness of mind; not the calmness of indifference but the calmness that comes from inner stability of character.

Blow through us, Thou clear wind of God, purifying the spirits of Thy people, so that the abundant resources of Thy grace and power may be found in us today. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 22, 1940, was read and approved.

ARMY BANDMASTERS—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 853)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
The House of Representatives.

SIR: There is transmitted herewith a sealed envelope containing a message from the President of the United States, received by me on June 25, 1940.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the veto message of the President as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3840, "to amend the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes."

It is the purpose of the bill to give to Army bandmasters the status of commissioned officers. Under the present organization of the Army, bandmasters are warrant officers. The legislation constitutes a novel departure in the organization of the Army for which there is no necessity from a military standpoint. The grade of warrant officer now accorded to bandmasters in the Army is fully adequate for the duties and responsibilities devolving on them.

Moreover, the bill would single out a special group of warrant officers for preferential treatment by way of increases in rank and compensation, without regard to the status of other warrant officers who perform duties and have responsibilities that are equal to and in certain cases greater than those of bandmasters.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 24, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask uanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a great many Members have asked what the program is for this week in order that they may make their plans. Today the Consent Calendar will be called, and I understand the Speaker will recognize for one suspension on the so-called emergency officers' bill. This will conclude the legislative program for the day. Tomorrow the Private Calendar will be called, and that will be all for that day. Wednesday one or two committees will probably be called on the calendar, but which ones I have not looked up. After that there will be no more business transacted this week. Of course, we will have to meet either Thursday or Friday in order to adjourn over until Monday, but if we have a session at all on Thursday it will be only for the purpose of adjourning over until Monday. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, Monday will be District Day, and in all probability the so-called Mexican claims bill will follow that program on Monday. Just what rule will be called up on Tuesday has not been determined, but that will be announced before the Wednesday session is over.

Mr. DITTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce to the House with great sorrow the passing of a former Member of this House, Hon. Burnet Mitchell Chiperfield, father of ROBERT CHIPERFIELD, presently a member of this House. Burnet M. Chiperfield served in the Sixty-fourth Congress and also in the Seventy-first and the Seventy-second. He died June 24, 1940, at the age of 70 years. He was a distinguished soldier. He was a distinguished lawyer and practiced at the bar for more than 40 years. He had been identified with the Illinois National Guard for more than a generation, and he was cited for both gallantry and meritorious service in the World War. At some future time I will address myself at greater length to the memory of a former Member of this House, the father of ROBERT B. CHIPERFIELD.

Older Members of Congress will remember B. M. Chiperfield for the diligence and capacity with which he addressed himself to the affairs of the Nation. They will remember his fine patriotic fiber and his intense interest in orderly processes of government and in the preservation of freedom of action and the free institutions of this country.

On occasion he has inspired the Congress with his masterly presentations of contemporary subjects. When called upon to deliver an address on the occasion of Lincoln's birthday, he forged a masterpiece, which is still being read widely everywhere in America.

Everyone remembers him as a man of physical and mental magnetism, who made a great contribution to his country and who now joins that numberless host of public servants who gave their bit that the Nation might move forward.

His passing marks a distinct loss of a great American, a great lawyer, a great legislator, a loving father, and a good neighbor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, practically the identical provisions of this bill were added to a bill that came out of the Public Lands Committee 2 weeks ago, but some of us who are interested in this bill did not know that the amendments were on that bill. The Public Lands Committee bill passed the House. I want to ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], who reported this bill, if he is not willing to ask now that this bill be laid on the table.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that that amendment was put on the bill before the Public Lands Committee at a time when I was not present, though if I had been present I would not have objected to its being put on this bill. I did not know the amendment was on the bill. So far as I personally am concerned, I am perfectly willing for the bill to be laid upon the table. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], however, is concerned with the bill personally; I am not. He may object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RETIREMENT BENEFITS FOR CHINESE, JAPANESE, AND HINDU INTERPRETERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8181, granting retirement benefits to Chinese, Japanese, and Hindu interpreters in the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill deals with about 25 employees of the Immigration Service who have rendered many years of service interpreting these languages on the Pacific coast. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request. It is desired to give these interpreters the benefit of the retirement legislation. They are American citizens. The bill in itself is limited to American citizens who have been employed in this very difficult service. I cannot imagine why the gentleman from New York should object.

Mr. TABER. Why were they not included in the Retirement Act at the time it was passed?

Mr. RAMSPECK. For the reason that they were not under the classified civil service. It is so difficult to get competent interpreters of these languages that they are excepted from the civil service.

Mr. TABER. It would seem to me, since the Retirement Act was originally designed to cover only those under civil service that we should make no more exceptions.

Mr. RAMSPECK. We have made quite a number of exceptions in the Retirement Act. The F. B. I. and other agencies have been given the benefit of the Retirement Act although they are not under civil service. I hope the gentleman will not press his request.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HAVENNER. These interpreters are American citizens and have devoted many years of their lives to the Government service. It would seem to me unfair not to give them this right.

Mr. TABER. But their employment is intermittent, is it not?

Mr. HAVENNER. No; it is not intermittent, it is continuous. The bill is limited to regular employees of the Immigration Service. These employees have a particularly difficult job, that of interpreting these oriental languages.

We put an amendment in the bill to limit it to American citizens.

Mr. TABER. I think we should not do this. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There was no objection.

TORT CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7236, to provide for the adjustment of certain claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the Court of Claims and the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is somewhat of a departure from existing laws. As I understand it, under existing laws, these agencies may adjust certain damages resulting from contractual relationship. This extends the power of the departments to adjust tort actions. It seems to me this puts altogether too much power in the hands of the head of a department to deteremine whether a tort has been committed. Sometimes attorneys and courts have difficulty in determining whether a tort has been committed.

Mr. CELLER. This does not place the matter in the hands of the Department of Justice. It simply sets up a right to proceed in a court of law, which right now is denied a person who has been injured by a tort committed by the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This waives the Government's immunity to suit.

Mr. CELLER. That is all it does. It takes away the Government's right to be sued in a tort, but we nevertheless proceeded very slowly on the matter. It was very, very carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. We preclude action against the Government in many cases. For instance, we exempt libel and slander. Only ordinary torts can be brought against the Government by this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It sets up an entirely new field in which the Government might be sued without specific consent. I think we should give a little more consideration to it than we can when we are considering bills on the Consent Calendar, and for this reason I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING LAND TO BE HELD IN TRUST FOR KLAMATH INDIANS

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of the general council of the Klamath Tribe of Indians, to purchase out of tribal funds of said Indians such lands as may be selected for that purpose by said council. Title to lands purchased pursuant to this section shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for said Indians, and said lands shall be subject to the same restrictions, immunities, and exemptions as lands held in trust for individual Indians under section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. As used in this act, the term "Klamath Tribe of Indians" includes the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2111, to amend the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 42, sec. 82), is amended by striking out the words "adjacent thereto."

AUTHORIZING THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO APPROVE TITLE TO LOW-VALUE LANDS SUBJECT TO INFIRMITIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9736, to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize the Attorney General to approve the title to low-valued lands and interests in lands acquired by or on behalf of the United States subject to infirmities, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 733; title 34, sec. 520; title 40, sec. 255; and title 50, sec. 175) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 355. No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy yard, customhouse, lighthouse, or other public building of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other law whenever the average value of any lands or interests in land to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States under a single option or contract of sale or by exchange or donation does not exceed $10 per acre (hereinafter referred to as "low-value lands"), the title may be accepted subject to such infirmities as, in the opinion of the Attorney General, may, without jeopardizing the interests of the United States, be left for removal by condemnation or other appropriate proceedings, if and when necessary: Provided, The total value of any lands or interests to be acquired under a single option or contract of sale subject to an infirmity does not exceed $3,500. No public money shall hereafter be expended for the acquisition of such low-value lands or interests in land by or on behalf of the United States for any purpose, nor in cases of donation and exchange shall grants be accepted until the written opinion of the Attorney General has been had approving the title subject, if expedient, to infirmities as herein provided. However, no money in excess of $2,500 shall be expended for the construction of buildings, works, or other improvements (except roads, trails, and fire-protection improvements) on any site, tract, or parcel of land the title to which is subject to infirmities, until the written opinion of the Attorney General in favor of the validity of the title has been had as in the case of other lands. For the purpose of this act values of lands and interests in land shall be determined in cases of purchase by the consideration paid or to be paid and in cases of donation and exchange by the acquiring authority's appraisal.

The Attorney General is hereby authorized to approve the title to easements or rights-of-way to be acquired by or on behalf of the United States, subject to such infirmities as, in his opinion, will not jeopardize the interests of the United States.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the authority now or hereafter delegated to any officer in exercising the power of eminent domain for or on behalf of the United States, to take title to or possession of or to expend money for or upon any land or interest in land, or to expend money as security for an ultimate award in advance of final judgment in any proceedings to determine just compensation; nor shall this act be construed to preclude any acquiring agency from expending money for the erection of any preliminary and temporary structure upon any land.

The head or other authorized officer of any department, independent establishment, or agency, shall procure any evidence of title which the Attorney General may deem necessary, and the expenses of procurement, except where otherwise authorized by law or provided by contract, may be paid out of the appropriations for the acquisition of land or out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of the acquiring department, independent establishment, or agency.

The Attorney General may, in his discretion, base any opinion as to title required either by this act or any other law upon either or both of the following: Certificates of title of title companies or such evidence of title as he may deem satisfactory.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the obtaining of exclusive jurisdiction in the United States over lands or interests therein which have been or shall hereafter be acquired by it shall not be required; but the head or other authorized officer of any department or independent establishment or agency of the Government may, in such cases and at such times as he may deem desirable, accept or secure from the State in which any lands or interests therein under his immediate jurisdiction, custody, or control are situated, consent to or cession of such jurisdiction, exclusive or partial, not theretofore obtained, over any such lands or interests as he may deem desirable and indicate acceptance of such jurisdiction on behalf of the United States by filing a notice of such acceptance with the Governor of such State or in such other manner as may be prescribed by the laws of the State where such lands are situated. Unless and until the United States has accepted jurisdiction over lands hereafter to be acquired as aforesaid, it shall be conclusively presumed that no such jurisdiction has been accepted.

With the following committee amendment:

"The foregoing provisions of this section shall not be construed to affect in any manner any existing provisions of law which are applicable to the acquisition of lands or interests in land by the Tennessee Valley Authority. Nor shall the foregoing provisions of this section, or the provisions of any other law, be construed to require any opinion of the Attorney General in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for military or naval purposes; or for the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way by the Department of Agriculture for forest and other conservation purposes where the cost of any such easement or right-of-way acquired under a single instrument of conveyance and the cost of any improvement thereon does not exceed $2,500; and the Attorney General may, in his discretion, waive the requirement for his opinion in connection with the acquisition or improvement of easements and rights-of-way for other purposes when, in his opinion, such waiver will not jeopardize the interests of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad to say that the local chapter of the Florida State Historical Society and all civic organizations in St. Augustine are in favor of changing the name of this national monument. DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8646, to authorize the exchange of certain patented lands in the Death Valley National Monument for Government lands in the monument.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the owner of the east half of the northeast quarter, section 35, township 15 south, range 44 east, of the Mount Diablo base meridian, Inyo County, Calif., within the Death Valley National Monument, is hereby permitted and authorized to convey the fee-simple title thereto to the United States, and select in lieu thereof the west half of the southeast quarter, section 36, township 15 south, range 44 east, of the Mount Diablo base meridian; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such conveyance, and thereafter cause a patent for the lands so selected to be issued to such owner, reserving to the United States, however, such rights-of-way as may be needed for the construction and maintenance of roads in the national monument: Provided, That the lands so conveyed to the United States shall become and be a part of the said national monument, and also subject to all laws and regulations relating to other lands therein: And provided further, That the owner of such privately owned lands within said national monument shall, before any exchange is effective, furnish to the Secretary of the Interior evidence satisfactory to him of title to the patent lands offered in exchange.

With the following committee amendments:

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATENT TO THE STATE OF MINNESOTA FOR CERTAIN LANDS IN THAT STATE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9732, relating to the issuance by the Secretary of the Interior of a patent to the State of Minnesota for certain lands in that State.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may cancel the patent issued on August 24, 1886, to Joe Blair, as allottee No. 4 of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, Minn., for the north half of the northeast quarter of section 30, township 49 north, range 17 west, of the fourth principal meridian in Minnesota, and may issue to the State of Minnesota a fee-simple patent for the tract of land described. If issued, the fee-simple patent shall operate as a full and complete conveyance of any and all right, title, or interest that the heirs of Joe Blair, deceased allottee No. 4 of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, Minn., and that the United States of America may have in and to said described lands. Prior to the issuance of such patent the Secretary of the Interior may require the State of Minnesota, at its expense, to furnish satisfactory evidence that there are no outstanding liens, encumbrances, or other conveyances of record against said lands other than the original patent issued under date of August 24, 1886, to the said Joe Blair covering the lands hereinabove described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION AND FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9514, for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill gives general authority to the Civil Works Administration to correct the accounts of any disbursing officers who may have some errors in their accounts. The only requirement that is made is that the Commissioner of Work Projects or his representative must certify that the payments appear to be free from fraud or collusion.

It seems to me this bill is too far reaching and is contrary to the ordinary practice as employed by other departments of the Government. Previously the Department submitted a list of the names with the amounts of money to the Congress and a bill covering them was passed. Subsequently the amounts of money were found to be in error, and as a result the President vetoed that bill. However, because of the failure of that bill to pass, it does not seem to me we are justified in passing general legislation on this subject giving permanent authority to the Department at all times to correct the accounts of the employees. It seems to me the proper procedure would be to submit a new bill giving the amounts as now found to be correct, and let the Congress pass such a bill.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PLACES OF CONFINEMENT OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF A FEDERAL OFFENSE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9954, to amend section 7 of the act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 326; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753 f), relating to places of confinement and transfer of persons convicted of an offense against the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Be it enacted, etc., That Alabama Bridge Commission (an agency of the State of Alabama), its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and causeway and approaches thereto at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Dauphin Island and the mainland at or near Cedar Point, within the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the exemptions provided in section 1 of the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 670): Provided, That when the period during which the Alabama Bridge Commission is authorized to operate and maintain such bridge for toll, pursuant to Act No. 580, General and Local Laws of Alabama, 1939, approved September 22, 1939, has been completed the bridge shall be operated free of toll.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 3929) may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Memphis, authorized to be built by the Memphis and Arkansas Bridge Commission by an act of Congress approved August 10, 1939, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 10, 1940.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to make the Senate bill conform to the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: After line 8, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The act approved August 10, 1939 (Public Law No. 365 of the 76th Cong.), is amended by adding at the end of section 6 of the said act the following new paragraph:

" 'If tolls are charged, either before or after the Commission is dissolved, for the use of such bridge and its approaches, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including interest at not more than 5 percent per annum and reasonable financing costs, as soon as possible under reasonable toll charges, but within a period not to exceed 20 years from the completion of the bridge. After the sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge and its approaches shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.' "

A House bill (H. R. 9678) was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER IN ALLEGHENY COUNTY, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9828, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of bridges across the Monongahela River in Allegheny County, Pa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge in Allegheny County, Pa., across the Monongahela River at a point suitable to navigation from the Borough of Dravosburg, in Allegheny County, Pa., to a point at or adjacent to the dividing line between the city of McKeesport, Pa., and the Borough of Glassport, Pa., and a bridge across the Monongahela River at a point suitable to navigation from the Borough of Rankin, Pa., to the Borough of Whitaker, Pa., construction of which bridges was authorized by an act of Congress approved July 25, 1939, be, and it is hereby, extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from July 25, 1940.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The situs for the trial of such civil and criminal cases shall be the situs of the United States District Court, Territory of Hawaii.

Appeals in such cases from said district court shall be had and allowed to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Judicial Circuit in the same manner as appeals are allowed from district courts to courts of appeal of the United States as provided by law; and the laws of the United States relating to juries and jury trials shall be applicable to the trial of such cases before said district court.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "and" at the end of the line, and on page 2, strike out the following in lines 1 to 7, inclusive: "that, having regard to the special status of Canton and Enderbury Islands in which the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom have agreed to set up a regime for their use in common, the said jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, extended to all civil and criminal cases arising on or within Canton Island, Enderbury Island, and the waters adjacent thereto."

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERM OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, RALEIGH, N. C.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9122) to provide a mixed civil and criminal term of 2 weeks at Raleigh of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3676) to withdraw certain portions of land within the Hawaii National Park and to transfer the same to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War for military purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a tract of land containing six thousand four hundred fifty acres, more or less, on the island of Hawaii in the Territory of Hawaii, located in the Hawaii National Park, created by the act of August 1, 1916 (39 Stat. 432), as amended, and described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a place called Na Puu O na Elemakule located at the southeastern corner of the Hawaii National Park, said point being marked by a triangle on a large flat stone, thence by azimuth (measured clockwise from true south) and distances as follows: Eighty-nine degrees twenty-seven minutes thirty seconds, three thousand three hundred feet along the southern boundary of Hawaii National Park; one hundred and seventy-nine degrees twenty-seven minutes thirty seconds, fourteen thousand five hundred and fifty feet over and across Pali to a point on Kau Desert Plateau; two hundred and forty-three degrees fifty-seven minutes no seconds, eighteen thousand four hundred and fifty feet to a point located above Hilina Pali; three hundred and fifty-nine degrees twenty-seven minutes thirty seconds, twelve thousand nine hundred and ninety feet more or less to high-water line; thence in southwesterly direction along the high-water line to the point of beginning; containing an area of six thousand four hundred and fifty acres, more or less; is hereby withdrawn from the Hawaii National Park and from the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior and is transferred to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of War for use as an Air Corps bombing target range, and for such other military purposes and uses as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, after the word "That", insert the word "within."

On page 2, line 10, change the spelling of the fourth word to "Hilina."

(3) On page 2, line 15, after the semicolon, strike out the words "is hereby" and insert in lieu thereof the words "there shall be."

On page 2, line 16, strike out the words "from Hawaii National Park and."

On page 2, line 18, strike out the word "is."

On page 2, line 19, after the word "War", insert "so much thereof as may be agreed upon between the Secretaries of War and Interior."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. ANDREW PICKENS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 369, to provide for the erection of a shrine or monument to the memory of Gen. Andrew Pickens.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FACILITIES OF NATIONAL PARKS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES

The Clerk called the bill (S. 29) to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for elementary-school purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Would the gentleman from Montana, the author of the bill, have any objection to including the words "Indian reservations"?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I would not. I think those words should be in the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. They have the same situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. The gentleman is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for some explanation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides that the people living in the national parks who have children and have no way of going to school except within the park, may attend school in the buildings owned by the Government within the park where the buildings are available, without detriment to the buildings or interfering in any way with other necessary use. It is simply a convenience to the children who live in the parks, where in the wintertime the snow gets from 4 to 8 feet deep in places. There is no way provided for them to get to school unless this provision is made.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to the bill, but as I understand it an amendment is to be proposed to open this to Indian children.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Oh, no; simply the children of employees.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, may we ask to have the amendment stated by the Clerk in the usual way?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 1, line 5, after the words "residence in", insert the words "Indian reservations", and on page 2, line 1, after the word "such", insert "Indian reservations", and amend the title.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this amendment does not change the existing law with respect to the education of Indian children.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; it does not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It authorizes that Government employees on Indian reservations may have the same advantages as the Government employees in the national parks?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And applies only to Government employees and not to Indian children?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate the providing of educational opportunities for children of Government employees and other residents in the national parks and national monuments the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to make available for elementary school purposes therein, without charge, space in Government-owned buildings, when such space may be available for such purposes without detriment to the official business of such national parks and national monuments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO FURNISH MATS FOR THE REPRODUCTION IN MAGAZINES OF PHOTOGRAPHS OF NATIONAL PARK SCENERY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 769, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish mats for the reproduction in magazines and newspapers of photographs of national park scenery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that this is a very worthy measure. It only provides for the use of $3,000 to furnish mats to small newspapers throughout the country, which show the scenic beauties and various other attractions in those parks. It will not only serve a good purpose but will stimulate travel in all of the parks. Of course, these mats may be purchased by the small newspapers now, but they come at such a price that it is prohibitive. In the first instance, they can be furnished by the Government very cheaply, and it seems to me it would be a small sum of money very wisely spent. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

AUTHORIZING SPECIAL AGENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR TO ADMINISTER OATHS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2627, to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, is there any possible reason why these folks should have this authority?

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RENTALS IN CERTAIN OIL AND GAS LEASES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2915, relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases issued under authority of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if somebody will explain this? It looks to me like a rather important bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill simply provides that the rentals on the leases for exploration in nonproven fields be waived for 2 years out of the 3 years. Remember, this is in nonproven fields. If any gas or oil is produced, then, of course, the waiver does not apply.

It is a very worthy bill. It will assist the little fellow who is trying to develop the lands upon which he has a lease. I sincerely hope that the gentleman will not object, because if the bill is not passed, many of these places where there may be oil and gas will go undeveloped, unproven, and the Government will receive nothing and nobdy else will receive anything. So I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HORTON. The statement made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] is entirely correct. The law itself is very stringent, but the regulations are even more so. Instead of imposing the rental of 25 cents an acre, which is provided by law, they have increased it to 50 cents an acre on lands that are outside of any proven field. It makes it absolutely impossible for any small operator to hold his lease. The bill as drawn waived the rental for the second and third year. We in the committee felt that it should be waived for the first and second year, because it is the first year that is tougher on the little fellow, and it will give him an opportunity to hold his lease until he can develop his land.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am a member of the Committee on the Public Lands which voted out this bill and I favored it. I am thinking of it in connection with mining, which is a little different, but in this respect, that we ought to encourage these hardy pioneers who go out there and exploit the natural resources of our country. We want to do everything we can to shield the fellow who has a small claim, so that he may go ahead and prove up on his claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] to state that he favored this bill because it permitted certain persons to exploit our natural resources?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I meant develop the natural resources.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman meant "develop"? I thought it was rather remarkable if the self-styled "Honest Harold" Ickes supported this bill on the premise the gentleman has given, that a few people would exploit these natural resources.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I used the word "exploit" in a proper and a better sense.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman really means to develop.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I mean to develop; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the provisions of this bill as it passed the Senate provided for a waiver of payment during the second and third years of the lease. Under the terms of the bill as amended by the House Committee the waiver has been changed to the first and second years. It seems to me to be rather ridiculous to expect anyone signing a lease for Government land, not having to pay any rental during the first 2 years, would, if he did not desire to employ the land further, pay rental on it the third year. In other words, the Government would receive no revenue whatsoever from the occupation of this lease during the period of the last year. If the committee amendment is withdrawn or rejected I shall have no objection to the bill. In other words, I shall not object to the bill if the lessee is required to make payment during the first year, but payment is waived during the second and third years; or if the gentleman wishes to reduce the amount of the payment from 50 to 25 cents an acre during the first year, that could be done.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman care to accept the amendment proposed?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the committee withdraw this amendment as to the first and second years.

Mr. HORTON. The gentleman will object to the bill unless this change is made?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. HORTON. I think that will prove to be a mistake, because it is during the first year that the prospector finds it difficult to meet his payments. To require him to pay the first year will make it just that much harder, but if the gentleman is going to object unless that change is made I shall have to agree to the change.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would suggest that we eliminate the second year. Then it would provide only for a waiver of the rental during the first and third years, and if he wishes to keep the land he will have to pay rental on it during the second year.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the best thing to do is for the committee to withdraw its amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We do not like to withdraw this amendment, Mr. Speaker, but on the theory that half a loaf is better than no loaf at all, if the gentleman is going to object, we reluctantly yield and will ask that the committee amendment be voted down.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of lands not within any known geologic structure of a productive oil or gas field, shall waive the rentals stipulated in oil and gas leases issued pursuant to section 17 of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended by the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 674), for the second and third lease years, unless a valuable deposit of oil or gas be sooner discovered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "second" and insert "first"; and strike out "third" and insert "second."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER ON FEDERAL RESERVATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1999, to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not some member of this committee tell us whether or not this bill will apply to Indian reservations?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the bill applies to Indian reservations. I asked that question in the committee and was answered in the affirmative.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad to have the gentleman make that statement, and I would be glad to yield for a further explanation.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman understands that this bill would apply to those trivial instances where on Federal reservations, such as parks, forests, historical sites, battlefields, and for Indians, petty offenses have been committed, the United States commissioner in the vicinity may act immediately, if the offender so desires. Such permissive practice would obviate unreasonable delay and travel, in many cases. Suppose you were touring in your own automobile, and while driving through Yosemite you violate a traffic rule, or pick a flower. Suppose you live in Boston. You might be arrested and placed under bond to appear for trial 2 or 3 months later in a Federal court, of course, in California. If so, you would have to stay in California, forfeit your bond, or travel from Boston to appear. This bill, if it becomes law, would permit you to settle the case within a few minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The bill, as I read it, on page 1, applies to persons charged with petty offenses against the law, or rules and regulations made in pursuance of law.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That would probably mean that the United States commissioners, under the terms of this bill, would have jurisdiction to try a person charged with a petty offense against rules and regulations made by an Indian tribal council which are made in pursuance of law if the accused so desired. Personally I have no objection to that; it might provide a change of venue, something not now offered and yet something that is essential in a well-considered system of justice.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am interested in this bill because of the Indian reservation feature which was mentioned. Under existing law—that is, under the Wheeler-Howard Act—the Indians elect their own judges to try these petty and trivial offenses. Under this bill, if it applies to Indian reservations, we are going to take away the right of these duly elected Indian judges to try these petty and trivial cases.

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; not if they acquire jurisdiction.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. They will then be tried by an appointed bureaucrat.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is mistaken, but I honor him for his zeal. This does not deprive any citizen of any right, nor does it deprive a court of any right which has attached. It simply makes available to anyone who is arrested on a petty charge an immediate disposition of his case, if the offense occurred on a Federal reservation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Let us take a specific case, a trivial offense under the code of laws adopted by an Indian tribe under the Wheeler-Howard Act. Under that code of laws an Indian judge elected by the Indians tries these cases. If this bill is passed, would not jurisdiction be taken away from the duly elected Indian judge, elected by the Indians on the reservation, and let an appointed bureaucrat, a commissioner, try the case?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; not exactly. The duly authorized courts would sit, and if they functioned promptly and expeditiously, and if they desired jurisdiction and assumed it, they could have it. If, on the other hand, it was agreeable to them and to all parties concerned, and the visitor wished immediate hearing, then they might leave it to the commissioner.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then, with reference to an Indian reservation, in case of a violation of a trivial law, the commissioner would not take jurisdiction away from the duly elected Indian judge except by permission of the Indian authorities?

Mr. HOBBS. The sole purpose of the bill, as I understand it, is to facilitate disposition of petty cases. It is not compulsory, but voluntary. It would not change the jurisdiction of any court, nor oust the jurisdiction once it had been asserted. I do not mean to say that expressed permission of Indian authorities is required.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will yield, let me read this sentence from the bill:

The commissioner before whom the defendant is arraigned shall apprise the defendant of his right to make such election and shall not proceed to try the case unless the defendant after being so apprised, signs a written consent to be tried before the commissioner.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has appeared before the Indian Affairs Committee in connection with Indian legislation. How about the judge elected by the Indians under the Wheeler-Howard Act? You are going to permit the defendant by signing a statement to be tried by an appointed commissioner instead of by the duly elected judge who has been elected by the Indians on the reservation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say, after considerable observation of these Indian courts that the accused persons, whether Indian or white, should have an opportunity for a change of venue. I hope this bill gives it to them.

The so-called law-and-order system now operating in a great deal of the Indian country often violates five basic principles of justice.

First, most of these Indian courts are fee courts. Judges and officers are tempted to go after the prisoners where they think fines can be collected.

Second, jury trial is denied in most of the reservations. If you lack faith in the justice of peace in my State, you can demand a jury trial, but not in these Indian courts.

Third, most of these Indian courts deny the right of counsel. Not all the offenses are so petty. I recall one Indian who was charged with bastardy. He maintained, with evidence, that the charge was a frame-up, yet he was not permitted to employ counsel for his defense.

Fourth, the judges, although elected by the Indians, are sometimes elected by a small minority vote. There are no primaries, no run-offs. With half a dozen candidates, the judge elected may represent less than 20 percent of the eligible voters. Yet he may pass on charges against persons against whom he has a personal grudge growing out of the election.

Fifth, most of these so-called law-and-order courts do not permit a change of venue. They have a system of junior and senior judges, but in operation they do not always provide the element of appeal or change of venue which is basic in our idea of Anglo-Saxon justice.

True, in most instances these courts have jurisdiction only over members of the tribes, but the Indians are entitled to justice, as well as the white man. In some instances, jurisdiction is asserted over whites on or passing through reservations. It will be remembered by the gentleman that a bill to extend the jurisdiction of these courts was before this House last year, H. R. 5409. I objected time after time until it was stricken from the calendar.

Now the bill before us seems to offer a chance for the accused, whether Indian or white, to take his case before the United States commissioner for a speedy trial if he feels that his trial would otherwise be delayed or that justice might be hard to obtain. The United States commissioner is not a bureaucrat as has been suggested; he is an officer of the United States district court, responsible to the Federal judge in the district. Certainly, if this bill offers a chance to correct the distressing conditions I have outlined, we should have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the gentleman's statement, I will withdraw my objection, but I shall offer an amendment to exclude Indian reservations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, to ask a question. In the instance cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin, under a special act passed by Congress in 1934, known as the Reorganization Act, it is therein provided for holding an election to elect judges to try such offenses as are contemplated in this bill. To say the least, it seems to me if this bill becomes law, at least on the surface it so appears, there will be a conflict of jurisdiction between the person who is legally elected under the law already in existence and the law contemplated to be passed here.

Mr. HOBBS. That is entirely possible under the gentleman's hypothesis, but may I answer him in this way: If any Indian court created under the act the gentleman has cited desires to inconvenience a citizen of the United States traveling through its jurisdiction, and spending his money on an Indian reservation and will not allow him to pay a fine of 50 cents or a dollar, with costs, so that the visitor may not be delayed unduly, then I suggest to the gentleman, if he wants to safeguard the rights of his Indian courts, that he offer an amendment eliminating Indian reservations from the purview of the bill. It will be accepted, so far as I am concerned. If he is sincere in his position, let him eliminate the Indian reservations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am trying only to prevent a conflict of jurisdiction where Indians are being tried and where no white person is involved at all.

Mr. HOBBS. Offer your amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am going to object to the bill unless that amendment is included.

Mr. HOBBS. That is your privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States commissioner specially designated for that purpose by the court by which he was appointed shall have jurisdiction to try and, if found guilty, to sentence persons charged with petty offenses against the law, or rules and regulations made in pursuance of law, committed in any place over which the Congress has exclusive power to legislate or over which the United States has concurrent jurisdiction, and within the judicial district for which such commissioner was appointed. The probation laws shall be applicable to persons so tried before United States commissioners. For the purposes of this Act the term "petty offense" shall be defined as in section 335 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 541). If any person charged with such petty offense shall so elect, however, he shall be tried in the district court of the United States which has jurisdiction over the offense. The commissioner before whom the defendant is arraigned shall apprise the defendant of his right to make such election and shall not proceed to try the case unless the defendant after being so apprised, signs a written consent to be tried before the commissioner.

SEC. 2. In all cases of conviction by United States commissioners an appeal shall lie from judgment of the commissioner to the district court of the United States for the district in which the offense was committed. The Supreme Court shall prescribe rules of procedure and practice for the trial of cases before commissioners and for taking and hearing of appeals to the said district courts of the United States.

SEC. 3. United States commissioners specially designated under authority of section 1 of this Act shall receive for services rendered under this Act the same fees, and none other, as provided for like or similar services in other cases under section 21 of the Act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 597).

SEC. 4. This Act shall not be construed as in any way repealing or limiting the existing jurisdiction, power, or authority of United States commissioners, including United States commissioners appointed for the several national parks and United States commissioners in Alaska.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this Act shall not apply to the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill without that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair waited for the gentleman to offer his amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order, but the Chair will give the gentleman an opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard no objection to the consideration of the bill. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. At the end of the bill insert an amendment:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to any Indian reservation in the United States.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has a right to offer an amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

LEASE, DEVELOPMENT, AND MAINTENANCE OF KELLEY HOMESTEAD, NEAR ELK RIVER, MINN.

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 376) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to accept from the National Grange a lease of the Kelley homestead, near Elk River, Minn., and providing for its development and maintenance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice in the letter from the Secretary that he states he does not recommend any appropriation, and I note that in this bill there is an appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may say to the gentleman that we had some discussion about that feature. It is intended to make a sort of a shrine out of this homestead. It is to be leased without cost or at nominal cost to the Government. This is the homestead of the founder of the National Grange, which is the oldest farm organization in America. After some discussion, the committee thought it was such a desirable objective that it might be wise to authorize an appropriation—it is not an appropriation, it is simply an authorization—of not to exceed $20,000, so that whatever plans were made within that reasonable limitation they might proceed to carry out. For that reason, the committee, after going into the matter, unanimously reported the joint resolution without the restriction.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PROVISIONAL OFFICERS WHO SERVED DURING THE WORLD WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 458, extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928, as amended, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War," are hereby extended to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the military or naval forces or Coast Guard, who served subsequent to April 6, 1917, and who are now in a status of honorable separation from the military, naval, or Coast Guard Service, if application for such benefits is filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs within 12 months after the passage of this act: Provided, That the benefits under this act shall take effect from the date of application, if approved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, beginning in line 3, after "1928", strike out the remainder of page 1 and all of line 1 on page 2 and insert the following:

"(Public, No. 506, 70th Cong.), subject to the limitations contained in section 10 of the act of March 20, 1933 (Public, No. 2, 73d Cong.), as now or hereafter amended."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 3493 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10080, to amend section 3493 of the Internal Revenue Code, formerly section 404 of the Sugar Act of 1937.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3493 of the Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. —, pt. 1) be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3493. Exportation.

"(a) Refund of tax paid: Upon the exportation from the United States to a foreign country, or the shipment from the United States to any possession of the United States except Puerto Rico, of any manufactured sugar, or any article manufactured wholly or partly from manufactured sugar, with respect to which tax under the provisions of section 3490 has been paid, the amount of such tax shall be paid by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the consignor named in the bill of lading under which the article was exported or shipped to a possession, or to the shipper, or to the manufacturer of the manufactured sugar or of the articles exported, if the consignor waives any claim thereto in favor of such shipper or manufacturer: Provided, That no such payment shall be allowed with respect to any manufactured sugar, or article, upon which, through substitution or otherwise, a draw-back of any tax paid under section 3500 has been or is to be claimed under any provisions of law made applicable by section 3501.

"(b) Period for filing refund claim: No payment shall be allowed under this section unless within 2 years after the right to such payment has accrued a claim therefor is filed by the person entitled thereto."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10101, to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the committee going to add the amendment which I submitted last week?

Mr. HOBBS. The committee has no power to add an amendment to a bill without House action. We are going to offer it as a committee amendment and urge its passage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will that be done before the bill is adopted?

Mr. HOBBS. It will be offered to the bill if unanimous consent is granted to consider the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman presented his amendment to the committee, and it was the consensus of the Committee on the Judiciary that the bill should not pass unless it contained that amendment. The bill was reported out that way. As I understand, and I believe the other members of the committee will bear me out, the bill would not be here unless the intention was to include that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The Chair calls attention to the fact that there is a similar Senate bill pending on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota and which will be offered as a committee amendment be read for the information of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed to be offered, for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS, from the Committee on the Judiciary: On page 2, line 12, after the semicolon in line 12, strike out "to parts for the repair of farm machinery" and insert "to farm machinery, parts thereof, and binder twine."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this takes care of the objections raised before the committee as far as certain penal institutions throughout the country were concerned.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I submitted that amendment, and it is agreeable with me that the bill be considered if the amendment is inserted in the bill. Otherwise, I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall knowingly transport or knowingly cause to be transported in interstate commerce, in any manner, or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist, knowingly, in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State, or States, or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities: Provided further, That this act shall go into effect 1 year after its approval by the President.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS from the Committee on the Judiciary: On page 2, line 12, after the semicolon in line 12, strike out "to parts for the repair of farm machinery" and insert "to farm machinery, parts therefor, and binder twine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 3550, be substituted for the House bill, and that the language of the Senate bill be stricken out and the language of the House bill as amended be inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 10101) was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF ESTATES OF AMERICAN CITIZENS WHO DIE ABROAD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10015, to provide for the disposition of estates of American citizens who die abroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 4097, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1709 and 1711 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 22, secs. 75 and 77), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"1709. It shall be the duty of a consular officer, or if no consular officer is present a diplomatic officer, under such procedural regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe—

"First. To take possession and to dispose of the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, except a seaman who is a member of the crew of an American vessel, who shall die within or is domiciled at time of death within his jurisdiction: Provided, That such procedure is authorized by treaty provisions or permitted by the laws or authorities of the country wherein the death occurs, or the decedent is domiciled, or that such privilege is accorded by established usage: Provided further, That the decedent shall leave in the country where the death occurred or where he was domiciled, no legal representative, partner in trade, or trustee by him appointed to take care of his personal estate. A consular officer or, in his absence, a diplomatic officer shall act as the provisional conservator of the personal property within his jurisdiction of a deceased citizen of the United States but, unless authorized by treaty provisions, local law, or usage, he shall not act as administrator of such personal property. He shall render assistance in guarding, collecting, and transmitting the property to the United States to be disposed of according to the law of the decedent's domicile.

"Second. After having taken possession of the personal property, as provisional conservator, to inventory and carefully appraise the effects, article by article, with the assistance of two competent persons who, together with such officer, shall sign the inventory and annex thereto an appropriate certificate as to the accuracy of the appraised value of each article.

"Third. To collect the debts due to the decedent in his jurisdiction and pay from the estate the obligations owed there by the decedent.

"Fourth. To sell at auction, after reasonable public notice, unless the amount involved does not justify such expenditure, such part of the estate as shall be of a perishable nature, and such further part, if any, as shall be necessary for the payment of the decedent's debts incurred in such country, and funeral expenses, and expenses incident to the disposition of the estate. If, at the expiration of 1 year from the date of death (or for such additional period as may be required for final settlement of the estate), no claimant shall appear, the residue of the estate, with the exception of investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value, shall be sold.

"Fifth. To transmit to the General Accounting Office the proceeds of the sale (and any unsold effects, such as investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value), there to be held in trust for the legal claimant. If, however, at any time prior to such transmission, the decedent's legal representative should appear and demand the proceeds and effects in the officer's hands, he shall deliver them to such representative after having collected the prescribed fee therefor.

"The Comptroller General of the United States, or such member of the General Accounting Office as he may duly empower to act as his representative for the purpose, shall act as conservator of such parts of these estates as may be received by the General Accounting Office or are in its possession, and may, when deemed to be in the interest of the estate, sell such effects, including bonds, shares of stock, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or other articles, which have heretofore or may hereafter be so received, and pay the expenses of such sale out of the proceeds: Provided, That application for such effects shall not have been made by the legal claimant within 6 years after their receipt. The Comptroller General is authorized, for and in behalf of the estate of the deceased, to receive any balances due to such estates, to draw therefor on banks, safe deposits, trust or loan companies, or other like institutions, to endorse all checks, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and take such other action as may be deemed necessary for the conservation of such estates. The net proceeds of such sales, together with such other moneys as may be collected by him, shall be deposited into the Treasury to a fund in trust for the legal claimant and reported to the Secretary of State.

"If no claim to the effects the proceeds of which have been so deposited shall have been received from a legal claimant of the deceased within 6 years from the date of the receipt of the effects by the General Accounting Office, the funds so deposited, with any remaining unsold effects, less transmittal charges, shall be transmitted by that Office to the proper officer of the State or Territory of the last domicile in the United States of the deceased citizen, if known, or, if not, such funds shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts on account of proceeds of deceased citizens, and any such remaining unsold effects shall be disposed of by the General Accounting Office in such manner as, in the judgment of the Comptroller General, is deemed appropriate, or they may be destroyed if considered no longer possessed of any value: Provided, That when the estate shall be valued in excess of $500, and no claim therefor has been presented to the General Accounting Office by a legal claimant within the period specified in this paragraph or the legal claimant is unknown, before disposition of the estate as provided herein, notice shall be given by publishing once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the last-known domicile of the deceased in the United States, the expense thereof to be deducted from the proceeds of such estate, and any lawful claim received as the result of such advertisement shall be adjusted and settled as provided for herein."

"1711. When a citizen of the United States dies in a foreign country and leaves, by any lawful testamentary disposition, special directions for the custody and management, by the consular officer, or, in his absence, a diplomatic officer, within whose jurisdiction the death occurred, of the personal property in the foreign country which he possessed at the time of death, such officer shall, so far as the laws of the foreign country permit, strictly observe such directions if not contrary to the laws of the United States. If such citizen has named, by any lawful testamentary disposition, any other person than a consular officer or diplomatic officer to take charge of and manage such property, it shall be the duty of the officer, whenever required by the person so named, to give his official aid in whatever way may be practicable to facilitate the proceedings of such person in the lawful execution of his trust, and, so far as the laws of the country or treaty provisions permit, to protect the property of the deceased from any interference by the authorities of the country where such citizen died. To this end it shall be the duty of the consular officer, or, if no consular officer is present, a diplomatic officer, to safeguard the decedent's property by placing thereon his official seal and to break and remove such seal only upon the request of the person designated by the deceased to take charge of and manage his property."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of H. R. 10015, as amended, as follows:

"That sections 1709, 1710, and 1711 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 22, secs. 75 and 77), are hereby amended to read as follows:

" '1709. It shall be the duty of a consular officer, or, if no consular officer is present, a diplomatic officer, under such procedural regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe—

" 'First. To take possession and to dispose of the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, except a seaman who is a member of the crew of an American vessel, who shall die within or is domiciled at time of death within his jurisdiction: Provided, That such procedure is authorized by treaty provisions or permitted by the laws or authorities of the country wherein the death occurs, or the decedent is domiciled, or that such privilege is accorded by established usage: Provided further, That the decedent shall leave in the country where the death occurred or where he was domiciled, no legal representative, partner in trade, or trustee by him appointed to take care of his personal estate. A consular officer or, in his absence, a diplomatic officer shall act as the provisional conservator of the personal property within his jurisdiction of a deceased citizen of the United States but, unless authorized by treaty provisions, local law, or usage, he shall not act as administrator of such personal property. He shall render assistance in guarding, collecting, and transmitting the property to the United States to be disposed of according to the law of the decedent's domicile.

" 'Second. After having taken possession of the personal property, as provisional conservator, to inventory and carefully appraise the effects, article by article, with the assistance of two competent persons who, together with such officer, shall sign the inventory and annex thereto an appropriate certificate as to the accuracy of the appraised value of each article.

" 'Third. To collect the debts due to the decedent in his jurisdiction and pay from the estate the obligations owed there by the decedent.

" 'Fourth. To sell at auction, after reasonable public notice, unless the amount involved does not justify such expenditure, such part of the estate as shall be of a perishable nature, and after reasonable public notice and notice to next of kin if they can be ascertained by reasonable diligence such further part, if any, as shall be necessary for the payment of the decedent's debts incurred in such country, and funeral expenses, and expenses incident to the disposition of the estate. If, at the expiration of 1 year from the date of death (or for such additional period as may be required for final settlement of the estate), no claimant shall appear, the residue of the estate, with the exception of investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value, shall be sold.

" 'Fifth. To transmit to the General Accounting Office the proceeds of the sale (and any unsold effects, such as investment of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value), there to be held in trust for the legal claimant. If, however, at any time prior to such transmission, the decedent's legal representative should appear and demand the proceeds and effects in the officer's hands, he shall deliver them to such representative after having collected the prescribed fee therefor.

" 'The Comptroller General of the United States, or such member of the General Accounting Office as he may duly empower to act as his representative for the purpose, shall act as conservator of such parts of these estates as may be received by the General Accounting Office or are in its possession, and may, when deemed to be in the interest of the estate, sell such effects, including bonds, shares of stock, notes of indebtedness, jewelry, or other articles, which have heretofore or may hereafter be so received, and pay the expenses of such sale out of the proceeds: Provided, That application for such effects shall not have been made by the legal claimant within 6 years after their receipt. The Comptroller General is authorized, for and in behalf of the estate of the deceased, to receive any balances due to such estates, to draw therefor on banks, safe deposits, trust or loan companies, or other like institutions, to endorse all checks, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and take such other action as may be deemed necessary for the conservation of such estates. The net proceeds of such sales, together with such other moneys as may be collected by him, shall be deposited into the Treasury to a fund in trust for the legal claimant and reported to the Secretary of State.

"'If no claim to the effects the proceeds of which have been so deposited shall have been received from a legal claimant of the deceased within 6 years from the date of the receipt of the effects by the General Accounting Office, the funds so deposited, with any remaining unsold effects, less transmittal charges, shall be transmitted by that office to the proper officer of the State or Territory of the last domicile in the United States of the deceased citizen, if known, or, if not, such funds shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts on account of proceeds of deceased citizens, and any such remaining unsold effects shall be disposed of by the General Accounting Office in such manner as, in the judgment of the Comptroller General, is deemed appropriate, or they may be destroyed if considered no longer possessed of any value: Provided, That when the estate shall be valued in excess of $500, and no claim therefor has been presented to the General Accounting Office by a legal claimant within the period specified in this paragraph or the legal claimant is unknown, before disposition of the estate as provided herein, notice shall be given by publishing once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the last known domicile of the deceased, in the United States, the expense thereof to be deducted from the proceeds of such estate, and any lawful claim received as the result of such advertisement shall be adjusted and settled as provided for herein."

"'1710. For the information of the representative of the deceased, the consular officer, or, if no consular officer is present, a diplomatic officer, in the settlement of his estate shall immediately notify his death in one of the gazettes published in the consular district, and also to the Secretary of State, that the same may be notified in the State to which the deceased belonged; and he shall, as soon as may be, transmit to the Secretary of State an inventory of the effects of the deceased taken as before directed.

"'1711. When a citizen of the United States dies in a foreign country and leaves, by any lawful testamentary disposition, special directions for the custody and management, by the consular officer, or in his absence a diplomatic officer, within whose jurisdiction the death occurred, of the personal property in the foreign country which he possessed at the time of death, such officer shall, so far as the laws of the foreign country permit, strictly observe such directions if not contrary to the laws of the United States. If such citizen has named, by any lawful testamentary disposition, any other person than a consular officer or diplomatic officer to take charge of and manage such property, it shall be the duty of the officer, whenever required by the person so named, to give his official aid in whatever way may be practicable to facilitate the proceedings of such person in the lawful execution of his trust, and, so far as the laws of the country or treaty provisions permit, to protect the property of the deceased from any interference by the authorities of the country where such citizen died. To this end it shall be the duty of the consular officer, or if no consular officer is present a diplomatic officer, to safeguard the decedent's property by placing thereon his official seal and to break and remove such seal only upon the request of the person designated by the deceased to take charge of and manage his property.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

No money shall be paid from the Treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate, to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate. The provisions of this section shall not apply (a) if the vacancy arose within 30 days prior to the termination of the session of the Senate; or (b) if, at the time of the termination of the session of the Senate, a nomination for such office, other than the nomination of a person appointed during the preceding recess of the Senate, was pending before the Senate for its advice and consent; or (c) if a nomination for such office was rejected by the Senate within 30 days prior to the termination of the session and a person other than the one whose nomination was rejected thereafter receives a recess commission: Provided, That a nomination to fill such vacancy under (a), (b), or (c) hereof, shall be submitted to the Senate not later than 40 days after the commencement of the next succeeding session of the Senate."

SECTION 3709 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10061, to consolidate certain exceptions to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT TO MEMBERS OF THE OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS AND OF THE ENLISTED RESERVE CORPS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3131, to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who were physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training between dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, and for other purposes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anyone here who can explain this bill and why it should be here?

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] here. I know something about the bill as it came before our committee. This bill takes care largely of Air Corps commissioned and noncommissioned officers who, prior to the last National Defense Act, were not protected, but are now protected. This puts them under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act and applies to men, for instance, who are still living with a broken back or something of that sort. There are only about eight cases to which the bill will apply, and they are all Reserve officers or Reserve noncoms.

Mr. TABER. Why should we have the Employees' Compensation Act apply to officers of the Reserve Corps or noncommissioned officers of the Reserve Corps?

Mr. EDMISTON. Because prior to the passage of the last National Defense Act that was the only Government agency under which they could get compensation. They were not members of the Army, and until we put this particular clause in the last act that was the only agency from which they could get relief.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where in time of peace any member of the Officers' Reserve Corps or of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army was physically injured in line of duty (1) while on active duty, or (2) while engaged in authorized travel to and from such duty, or (3) while engaged in authorized training without pay, or dies or has died as the result of such physical injury, where such injury or death occurred between the dates of February 28, 1925, and July 15, 1939, both inclusive, he or his beneficiary shall be entitled to all the benefits prescribed by law for civil employees of the United States who are physically injured in line of duty or who die as a result thereof, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall have jurisdiction in such cases and shall perform the same duties with reference thereto as in the cases of civil employees of the United States so injured: Provided, That the benefits shall accrue to any such member, or his beneficiary, whether the disability or death is the result of sickness or disease contracted in line of duty while on active duty when such sickness or disease is proximately caused by service on active duty: Provided further, That employees' compensation under this act shall not be paid concurrently with active-duty pay or pension based upon military service, and in the event a person becomes eligible for the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act and is also eligible for, or is in receipt of, a pension based upon military service, he shall elect which benefit to receive: Provided further, That authorized training without pay is defined as inactive-status training under written authorization by competent military authority covering a specific training assignment and prescribing a time limit: Provided further, That for the purpose of determining benefits to which entitled under the provisions of this act members of the Officers' Reserve Corps or of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army physically injured when engaged in authorized training without pay will be held and considered as receiving the pay and allowances they would have received if in a pay status: Provided further, That Reserve officers entitled to the benefits of the last proviso of section 5 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to authorize compensation benefits which may have accrued for any period prior to the approval of this act but eligibility for compensation benefits shall be determined as of the date of approval of this act and any benefits payable shall date only from such approval.

Where injury or death has been sustained by any member of the Officers' Reserve Corps or Enlisted Reserve Corps while performing authorized training without pay upon inactive status it shall be presumed that such training was being performed under written authorization of competent military authority covering a specific training assignment and prescribing a time limit and thus subject to the provision of this act unless a duly appointed examining board, appointed at the time of said accident, has found and reported to the contrary.

All claims for disability or death benefits allowed under the provisions of this act shall be made within 1 year from its approval by the President.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 4, after the comma following the word "inclusive", insert the following language: "when such injury or death results from an accident involving a military hazard such as flying in military aircraft, participation in military drills, target practice and tactical exercises, and in injury cases where such injury has resulted in permanent partial or permanent total disability."

On page 3, line 13, strike out the following proviso: "Provided further, That Reserve officers entitled to the benefits of the last proviso of section 5 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act."

On page 3, line 17, after the word "approval", insert the following: "and the 8-year period of limitation in section 10–G of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, shall be computed for purposes of this act from the date of approval thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

That to provide for the increased salaries and compensation of the United States Building Police, so much as is necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supplement the amounts which have heretofore been appropriated for the payment of the salaries of the building guards in the buildings in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the Federal Works Agency.

To the Congress of the United States:

We are engaged in a great national effort to build up our national defenses to meet any and every potential attack.

We are asking even our humblest citizens to contribute their mite.

It is our duty to see that the burden is equitably distributed according to ability to pay so that a few do not gain from the sacrifices of the many.

I, therefore, recommend to the Congress the enactment of a steeply graduated excess-profits tax, to be applied to all individuals and all corporate organizations without discrimination.

I am returning herewith, without approval, H. R. 2014, entitled "An act for the relief of Margaret Redmond."

The bill would direct the payment of $5,257.50 to Margaret Redmond, widow of James Redmond, as back pension allegedly due the veteran, under the pension laws applicable to veterans of Indian wars, for the period extending from December 1, 1923, to September 30, 1935, it being contended that the veteran executed an application for pension in the month of December 1923, and that said application was lost or mislaid without fault on his part.

The only application of James Redmond for pension on file in the Veterans' Administration, to which the records of the former Pension Bureau were transferred in 1930, is an application filed on September 30, 1935, on account of which an award was approved in the amount of $50 per month. Subsequently, the veteran contended that he should have been allowed a pension from March 4, 1917, for the reason that he had previously made an application for such benefit in the year 1923. However, the alleged application of 1923 was not mailed by the claimant to the then Pension Bureau. He alleged that he merely filled out the application in the office of a Congressman and depended upon the particular Representative to forward such application to the proper Government department. A thorough search has failed to reveal the existence of this application and there is no correspondence of record showing that inquiry had been made by the veteran, or those interested in his behalf, as to why benefits had not been paid. He also failed to produce the customary notification card or other satisfactory evidence showing that an application had been received by the Pension Bureau. Furthermore, the veteran stated in his application of September 1935, that he had not previously made a claim for pension. A period of over 12 years elapsed between the time the veteran alleged he filed an application until his application of September 1935 was received.

In view of the determinations made in this case, including that of the Board of Veterans' Appeals, that there is a total absence of any official information to establish the fact that the veteran submitted a properly executed application for pension in 1923, or at any time other than September 30, 1935, I am of the opinion that approval of the bill is not justified.

It is in order to point out that soon after the veteran's death in 1936, Mrs. Margaret Redmond, the veteran's widow and beneficiary under the bill, filed a claim for and was awarded a pension in the amount of $30 per month, which pension is being currently paid.

REDUCTION OF POLLUTION, OHIO RIVER DRAINAGE BASIN

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3617, granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to control and reduction of pollution in the Ohio River drainage basin, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to an interstate compact relating to the control and reduction of the pollution of the streams of the Ohio River drainage basin negotiated and entered into or to be entered into under authority of Public Resolution No. 104, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 8, 1936, and now ratified by the States of New York, Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana, and by the State of Ohio (whose ratification is to go into effect at the time at which the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia enter into said compact as parties and signatory States), also by the State of West Virginia (whose ratification is to go into effect at the time at which the States of New York, Ohio, Virginia, and Pennsylvania enter into said compact as parties and signatory States), which compact reads as follows:

"SECTION 1.—

"OHIO RIVER VALLEY WATER SANITATION COMPACT

"BETWEEN THE STATES OF ILLINOIS, INDIANA, KENTUCKY, NEW YORK, OHIO, PENNSYLVANIA, TENNESSEE, AND WEST VIRGINIA

"Pursuant to authority granted by an act of the 74th Congress of the United States, Public Resolution 104, approved June 8, 1936, conferences of delegates appointed to draft the compact were held at Cincinnati, Ohio, on November 20, 1936; January 17, 1938; May 24, 1938; June 13, 1938; October 11, 1938.

"Whereas, a substantial part of the territory of each of the signatory states is situated within the drainage basin of the Ohio River; and

"Whereas, the rapid increase in the population of the various metropolitan areas situated within the Ohio drainage basin, and the growth in industrial activity within that area, have resulted in recent years in an increasingly serious pollution of the waters and streams within the said drainage basin, constituting a grave menace to the health, welfare, and recreational facilities of the people living in such basin, and occasioning great economic loss; and

"Whereas, the control of future pollution and the abatement of existing pollution in the waters of said basin are of prime importance to the people thereof, and can best be accomplished through the cooperation of the States situated therein, by and through a joint or common agency;

Now, therefore, the States of Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and West Virginia do hereby covenant and agree as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"Each of the signatory States pledges to each of the other signatory States faithful cooperation in the control of future pollution in and abatement of existing pollution from the rivers, streams, and waters in the Ohio River Basin which flow through, into, or border upon any of such signatory States, and in order to effect such object, agrees to enact any necessary legislation to enable each such State to place and maintain the waters of said basin in a satisfactory sanitary condition, available for safe and satisfactory use as public and industrial water supplies after reasonable treatment, suitable for recreational usage, capable of maintaining fish and other aquatic life, free from unsightly or malodorous nuisance due to floating solids or sludge deposits, and adaptable to such other uses as may be legitimate.

"ARTICLE II

"The signatory States hereby create a district to be known as the 'Ohio River Valley Water Sanitation District,' hereinafter called the District, which shall embrace all territory within the signatory States, the water in which flows ultimately into the Ohio River or its tributaries.

"ARTICLE III

"The signatory States hereby create the 'Ohio River Valley Water Sanitation Commission,' hereinafter called the Commission, which shall be a body corporate, with the powers and duties set forth herein, and such additional powers as may be conferred upon it by subsequent action of the respective legislatures of the signatory States or by act or acts of the Congress of the United States.

"ARTICLE IV

"The Commission shall consist of three commissioners from each State, each of whom shall be a citizen of the State from which he is appointed, and three commissioners representing the United States Government. The commissioners from each State shall be chosen in the manner and for the terms provided by the laws of the States from which they shall be appointed, and any commissioner may be removed or suspended from office as provided by the law of the State from which he shall be appointed. The commissioners representing the United States shall be appointed by the President of the United States, or in such other manner as may be provided by Congress. The commissioners shall serve without compensation, but shall be paid their actual expenses incurred in and incident to the performance of their duties; but nothing herein shall prevent the appointment of an officer or employee of any State or of the United States Government.

"ARTICLE V

"The Commission shall elect from its number a chairman and vice chairman, and shall appoint, and at its pleasure remove or discharge, such officers and legal, clerical, expert, and other assistants as may be required to carry the provisions of this compact into effect, and shall fix and determine their duties, qualifications, and compensation. It shall adopt a seal and suitable bylaws, and shall adopt and promulgate rules and regulations for its management and control. It may establish and maintain one or more offices within the District for the transaction of its business, and may meet at any time or place. One or more commissioners from a majority of the member States shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"The Commission shall submit to the Governor of each State, at such time as he may request, a budget of its estimated expenditures for such period as may be required by the laws of such State for presentation to the legislature thereof.

"The Commission shall keep accurate books of account, showing in full its receipts and disbursements, and said books of account shall be open at any reasonable time to the inspection of such representatives of the respective signatory States as may be duly constituted for that purpose.

"On or before the first day of December of each year, the Commission shall submit to the respective Governors of the signatory States a full and complete report of its activities for the preceding year.

"The Commission shall not incur any obligations of any kind prior to the making of appropriations adequate to meet the same; nor shall the Commission pledge the credit of any of the signatory States, except by and with the authority of the legislature thereof.

"ARTICLE VI

"It is recognized by the signatory States that no single standard for the treatment of sewage or industrial wastes is applicable in all parts of the District due to such variable factors as size, flow, location, character, self-purification, and usage of waters within the District. The guiding principle of this compact shall be that pollution by sewage or industrial wastes originating within a signatory State shall not injuriously affect the various uses of the interstate waters as hereinbefore defined.

"All sewage from municipalities or other political subdivisions, public or private institutions, or corporations, discharged or permitted to flow into these portions of the Ohio River and its tributary waters which form boundaries between, or are contiguous to, two or more signatory States, or which flow from one signatory State into another signatory State, shall be so treated, within a time reasonable for the construction of the necessary works, as to provide for substantially complete removal of settleable solids, and the removal of not less than 45 percent of the total suspended solids; provided that, in order to protect the public health or to preserve the waters for other legitimate purposes, including those specified in article I, in specific instances such higher degree of treatment shall be used as may be determined to be necessary by the Commission after investigation, due notice, and hearing.

"All industrial wastes discharged or permitted to flow into the aforesaid waters shall be modified or treated, within a time reasonable for the construction of the necessary works, in order to protect the public health or to preserve the waters for other legitimate purposes, including those specified in article I, to such degree as may be determined to be necessary by the Commission after investigation, due notice, and hearing.

"All sewage or industrial wastes discharged or permitted to flow into tributaries of the aforesaid waters situated wholly within one State shall be treated to that extent, if any, which may be necessary to maintain such waters in a sanitary and satisfactory condition at least equal to the condition of the waters of the interstate stream immediately above the confluence.

"The Commission is hereby authorized to adopt, prescribe, and promulgate rules, regulations, and standards for administering and enforcing the provisions of this article.

"ARTICLE VII

"Nothing in this compact shall be construed to limit the powers of any signatory State, or to repeal or prevent the enactment of any legislation or the enforcement of any requirement by any signatory State, imposing additional conditions and restrictions to further lessen or prevent the pollution of waters within its jurisdiction.

"ARTICLE VIII

"The Commission shall conduct a survey of the territory included within the District, shall study the pollution problems of the District, and shall make a comprehensive report for the prevention or reduction of stream pollution therein. In preparing such report, the Commission shall confer with any national or regional planning body which may be established, and any department of the Federal Government authorized to deal with matters relating to the pollution problems of the District. The Commission shall draft and recommend to the Governors of the various signatory States uniform legislation dealing with the pollution of rivers, streams and waters, and other pollution problems within the District. The Commission shall consult with and advise the various States, communities, municipalities, corporations, persons, or other entities with regard to particular problems connected with the pollution of waters, particularly with regard to the construction of plants for the disposal of sewage, industrial and other waste. The Commission shall, more than 1 month prior to any regular meeting of the legislature of any State which is a party thereto, present to the Governor of the State its recommendations relating to enactments to be made by any legislature in furthering the intents and purposes of this compact.

"ARTICLE IX

"The Commission may from time to time, after investigation and after a hearing issue an order or orders upon any municipality, corporation, person, or other entity discharging sewage or industrial waste into the Ohio River or any other river, stream or water, any part of which constitutes any part of the boundary line between any two or more of the signatory States, or into any stream any part of which flows from any portion of one signatory State through any portion of another signatory State. Any such order or orders may prescribe the date on or before which such discharge shall be wholly or partially discontinued, modified or treated or otherwise disposed of. The Commission shall give reasonable notice of the time and place of the hearing to the municipality, corporation or other entity against which such order is proposed. No such order shall go into effect unless and until it receives the assent of at least a majority of the commissioners from each of not less than a majority of the signatory States; and no such order upon a municipality, corporation, person or entity in any State shall go into effect unless and until it receives the assent of not less than a majority of the commissioners from such state.

"It shall be the duty of the municipality, corporation, person or other entity to comply with any such order issued against it or him by the Commission, and any court of general jurisdiction or any United States district court in any of the signatory States shall have the jurisdiction, by mandamus, injunction, specific performance or other form of remedy, to enforce any such order against any municipality, corporation or other entity domiciled or located within such State or whose discharge of the waste takes place within or adjoining such State, or against any employe, department or subdivision of such municipality, corporation, person or other entity; provided, however, such court may review the order and affirm, reverse or modify the same upon any of the grounds customarily applicable in proceedings for court review of administrative decisions. The Commission or, at its request, the Attorney General or other law enforcing official, shall have power to institute in such court any action for the enforcement of such order.

"ARTICLE X

"The signatory States agree to appropriate for the salaries, office and other administrative expenses, their proper proportion of the annual budget as determined by the Commission and approved by the Governors of the signatory States, one-half of such amount to be prorated among the several States in proportion to their population within the District at the last preceding federal census, the other half to be prorated in proportion to their land area within the District.

"ARTICLE XI

"This compact shall become effective upon ratification by the legislatures of a majority of the States located within the District and upon approval by the Congress of the United States; and shall become effective as to any additional States signing thereafter at the time of such signing."

SEC. 2. Without further submission of said compact, the consent of Congress is hereby given to the State of Virginia or any other State with waters in the Ohio River drainage basin, entering into said compact as a signatory State and party in addition to the States therein named or any of them.

SEC. 3. The commissioners to represent the United States, as provided in article IV of said compact, shall be appointed by the President.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of section 1 is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 8, after section 3, insert:

"SEC. 4. Nothing contained in this act or in the compact herein approved shall be considered as impairing or affecting the sovereignty of the United States or any of its rights or jurisdictions in and over the area or waters which are the subject of such compact."

Line 9, page 12, change the figure "4" to the figure "5."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, there is a similar Senate bill, S. 3931, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill may be substituted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Senate bill identical with the House bill, H. R. 9707?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in aid of the construction of the Parker Dam project, authorized by the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028), there is hereby granted to the United States, its successors and assigns, subject to the provisions of this act, all the right, title, and interest of the Indians in and to the tribal and allotted lands of the Fort Mohave Indian Reservation in Arizona and the Chemehuevi Reservation in California as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall determine the amount of money to be paid to the Indians as just and equitable compensation for the rights granted under section 1 hereof. In the case of tribal lands, the amount due to the appropriate tribe shall be deposited by the said Secretary in the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 560), as amended. The amounts due individual allottees, their heirs, or devisees shall be deposited by the said Secretary to the credit of the superintendent of the Colorado River Indian Agency, or such other officer as shall be designated by the Secretary, for the credit on the books of the said agency to the accounts of the individual Indians concerned.

SEC. 3. Funds deposited to the credit of the allottees, their heirs, or devisees may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the acquisition of other lands and improvements now in Indian ownership, or the construction of improvements for the allottees, their heirs, or devisees whose lands and improvements are acquired under the provisions of this act. Lands so acquired shall be held in the same status as those from which the funds were derived.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, there is an identical Senate bill, S. 3972, which I ask to be substituted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if the House bill, as reported by our Committee on Indian Affairs, is identical with the Senate bill?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. These bills are identical. I have checked them very carefully just a moment ago—H. R. 9808 and S. 3972.

Upon conveyance to the United States in trust for the Navajo Indians of the lands being acquired by the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue a patent in fee covering the lands granted in exchange: Provided, That the sufficiency of title to all such lands acquired by the United States shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TABER. It was called to the attention of the minority members?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes. It is just a change of the word "of" to the word "or."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I wish to assure the gentleman that I, a member of the minority on the Indian Affairs Committee, have been consulted. The Senate amendment

EXPLANATION

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I was supposed to have been at the Townsend convention today in St. Louis, and it would have been a very great pleasure to have attended. However, to keep the record straight, I wish to give two reasons why it was impossible to leave Washington at this time: First, the people of this Nation, including my own constituents, have insisted that Congress remain in session during the present crisis in Europe, and for that reason I felt that I should remain as close to my post of duty as possible. The second reason is that the Speaker of the House has informed me that he might recognize us for the suspension of the rules to bring up Senate Concurrent Resolution 40, a resolution dealing with the reimbursement of the people of Florida for losses sustained during the Mediterranean fruitfly campaign. Under the suspension of the rules it takes two-thirds of the Members voting to pass a bill. Senate Concurrent Resolution 40 affects hundreds of constituents in my district, and I am sure that none of them would understand my absence from the Capitol if this resolution is brought up. In addition to this, I have a bill on both the Consent and Private Calendars for today and tomorrow. For these reasons I must forego the pleasure of attending the convention. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the request that I made earlier to extend my remarks, to include therein a copy of a telegram sent by myself to a Legion post, and extracts from editorials, as well as citations from legal authorities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, July 3, after the disposition of the legislative program for the day I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6831) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain of the public lands to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California for the extraction of sodium chloride for water-conditioning purposes, with Senate amendments and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman advise the House whether the minority members have been advised of the request just made?

Mr. DEROUEN. The minority members of the committee have been advised and they are agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after "sodium", insert "solely."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "purposes", and insert "purposes: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to empower the said district to produce sodium chloride or any other valuable deposit in said lands for commercial purposes."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two editorials from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TO ENCOURAGE TRAVEL IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LEA, BULWINKLE, and WOLVERTON.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS ON FEDERAL RESERVATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 867, H. R. 1999, to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations. I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. O'CONNOR] do not desire to press their objections.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I must object because I had understood that we had left the calendar and there would be no further requests made to return to the calendar. I have just talked to the gentleman from Michigan who has suggested to me that in his absence he does object to returning to the calendar.

Mr. HOBBS. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection. The vacation season is now upon us and this bill is designed to expedite travel in the national parks. It is not a bill of any moment.

Mr. DITTER. I wonder if the gentleman will not withhold his request temporarily until we dispose of the suspension that is coming up.

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the time being.

WORLD WAR ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS OFFICERS

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 134) providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War, and for other purposes as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the amended bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of any law of the United States, any person who served as an officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the World War, who made valid application for retirement under the provisions of Public Law No. 506, Seventieth Congress, enacted May 24, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 581 and 582), and who prior to the passage of this act has been granted retirement with pay and is shown to have been heretofore correctly rated, shall be entitled to continue to receive retirement pay at the monthly rate paid him on March 19, 1933, if the disability for which he has been retired resulted from disease or injury or aggravation of a preexisting disease or injury incurred in such service in fact in line of duty and directly resulting from the performance of duty: Provided, That such person rendered active service as a commissioned officer within the period between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918: Provided further, That where the disability is now or hereafter determined to be clearly shown by all of the evidence to have been incurred in or aggravated by active service, in fact in line of duty without benefit of any statutory or regulatory presumption of any kind, it will be considered to have directly resulted from performance of duty: Provided further, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to adjudicate claims for emergency officers' retirement in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 24, 1928 (Public Law No. 506, 70th Cong.), subject to limitations contained in section 10 of the act of March 20, 1933 (Public Law No. 2, 73d Cong.), as modified by the provisions of this act, in any case where the disability resulted from injury or disease incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States, and where entitlement is established based upon such injury or disease the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized to grant retirement with pay as provided in the said act of May 24, 1928, notwithstanding the failure of the person to file claim within the period required by said act of May 24, 1928.

SEC. 2. No beneficiary under this act shall receive any retirement pay for any period prior to the date of this act.

SEC. 3. That subsection (b) of section 212 of Public Law No. 212, Seventy-second Congress, shall be amended to read as follows:

"(b) This section shall not apply to any person whose retired pay, plus civilian pay, amounts to less than $3,000: Provided, That this section shall not apply to Regular or emergency commissioned officers retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or for disabilities resulting from an explosion of an instrumentality of war in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), part I, paragraph I."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put the question.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill pass?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 483) were laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS ON FEDERAL RESERVATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to return to Calendar No. 867, H. R. 1999, to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try petty offenses committed on Federal reservations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States commissioner specially designated for that purpose by the court by which he was appointed shall have jurisdiction to try and, if found guilty, to sentence persons charged with petty offenses against the law, or rules and regulations made in pursuance of law, committed in any place over which the Congress has exclusive power to legislate or over which the United States has concurrent jurisdiction, and within the judicial district for which such commissioner was appointed. The probation laws shall be applicable to persons so tried before United States commissioners. For the purposes of this act the term "petty offense" shall be defined as in section 335 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 541). If any person charged with such petty offense shall so elect, however, he shall be tried in the district court of the United States which has jurisdiction over the offense. The commissioner before whom the defendant is arraigned shall apprise the defendant of his right to make such election and shall not proceed to try the case unless the defendant, after being so apprised, signs a written consent to be tried before the commissioner.

SEC. 2. In all cases of conviction by United States commissioners an appeal shall lie from the judgment of the commissioner to the district court of the United States for the district in which the offense was committed. The Supreme Court shall prescribe rules of procedure and practice for the trial of cases before commissioners and for taking and hearing of appeals to the said district courts of the United States.

SEC. 3. United States commissioners specially designated under authority of section 1 of this act shall receive for services rendered under this act the same fees, and none other, as provided for like or similar services in other cases under section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 597).

SEC. 4. This act shall not be construed as in any way repealing or limiting the existing jurisdiction, power, or authority of United States commissioners, including United States commissioners appointed for the several national parks and United States commissioners in Alaska.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this act shall not apply to the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE LAND—OUR ULTIMATE SECURITY

OUTLINE

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the decade ending with 1932, what did the farmers of America have?

They had the Farm Board and the panic.

What has been done for them since that time?

They have:

First, the soil and water conservation program.

Second, the lowest farm interest rates in our history.

Third, rural electrification.

Fourth, marketing agreements.

Fifth, commodity loans.

Sixth, parity payments.

Seventh, research into new uses and new markets.

Eighth, the stamp plan and distribution of surplus commodities.

Six million farmers are voluntarily cooperating in the various wings of the program.

Would anyone advocate the repeal of any of these acts?

OUR GREATEST INDUSTRY

Mr. Speaker, farming is as old as history. It was the original occupation of man. It produces the basic essentials of practically all other activities. "When tillage begins, the other arts follow. The farmers, therefore, are the founders of human civilization."

It need no longer be argued that the permanent success of industry is linked with the success of the producer. That is now accepted as axiomatic.

The business of farming is the largest individual business in America. Thirty million people produce billions in the value of cattle, sheep, hogs, and great quantities of corn, wheat, cotton, barley, rice, flax, and more than 100 other commodities. In value, volume, and number of people affected, it surpasses any other industry in our land.

For more than 100 years, legislation has been enacted in favor of various groups, and business practices have added to the cost of the farmers' supplies. Tariffs, trade barriers, wage scales, trusts, monopolies, transportation costs, and many other laws and practices have interfered with his original freedom of operation. Out of these things has grown the farm problem.

A remedy must be applied. It should be broad enough to cover the entire field. It is not a simple assignment. The scores of commodities require different methods, different facilities, different marketing, different forms of credit, and different approaches to the problem.

It is easy to criticize. It is difficult to construct. Just what has been done within the last few years?

SOIL CONSERVATION

In the first place, we have adopted a program of conserving and rebuilding the soil. Every man, woman, and child in America, in the long road of the future, is vitally interested in this program. A simple visit to the broken or worn-out soils of some of the older countries is a tragic lesson in the value of productive land. Anyone who will visit the north central and the great western, as well as the southern portions of our country cannot fail to be impressed with the marvelous work that has been done on millions of acres of American soil. This area constitutes the source of our food and clothing material. On this the future life of our Nation depends.

I think this activity should be made more strictly a soil-conserving and soil-building program. But does any thoughtful person want to repeal this phase of the law and thus end this great conservation program?

INTEREST RATES

Second. We established the Farm Credit Administration which covers all types of agricultural credit. More farmers were refinanced in the first 4 years of this activity than in the 16 previous years of the land banks' history. These were refinanced at the lowest farm interest rates that have ever prevailed in this or any other great country. In addition cooperatives have been financed. The Production Credit Corporation and the Crop Loan activities have financed the current credit needs of agriculture. These credit needs have been financed and are now being financed at the lowest agricultural interest rates in our history.

High interest rates have been the curse of the farmer for generations. They have kept him in debt. The low interest rates are provided not to get him into debt. They have been provided primarily to enable him to pay his obligations, to get him out of debt, and thus enable him at last to be free—free to pitch his crops in their season, to grow them in independence, and "to sell them in his own chosen markets in his own time and manner, and not at a master's bidding"—yes, free as the air he breathes, free as the country he loves, free as the hills and valleys to which he feels himself akin and which he calls his own.

MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Third. We have the marketing-agreement provision under which on a district, regional, or national basis producers may secure marketing agreements establishing prices and apportioning the market for the respective commodities on a fair basis.

There are now in effect 43 different marketing agreements covering 16 different commodities, and in many instances covering different types of each commodity. Milk and its products, fruits and vegetables, and many different activities are included. These marketing agreements now in operation affect 1,300,000 farmers.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Fourth. We have the Rural Electrification Administration. At the time it began to function about 10 percent of the farms in America had the advantage of electricity. Most of these were small farms near city plants. Now more than 25 percent of the farms of America have the advantages of electricity. For the 5-year span the increase has been nearly 200,000 electrified farms per year, or a total increase of nearly a million farms.

Produced in volume, electricity is one of the cheapest commodities in all the world. It is one of the most powerful and one of the most useful of all of the elements that have ever been harnessed to relieve the drudgery of man. Since the dawn of history the farmer has been engaged in hard, back-breaking work, covering long hours. In this work the women and children of the rural areas have been called upon to engage. Under this program this work has been greatly lightened. Electric irons, radios, ranges, vacuum cleaners, washing machines, bathroom facilities have been installed, and business increased in many lines of industry, as well as new hope and joy brought to many thousands of homes. What a superb accomplishment. Would anyone pronounce this work a failure or desire to end its fine accomplishments? I want to see an electrified America.

COMMODITY LOANS

Fifth. We have provided commodity loans for all agricultural commodities to prevent complete price collapse which always comes when surplus production of a commodity gluts the market. This enables the commodity to be tided over until the market can normally absorb it.

WATER USE

Sixth. We have enacted the Water Facilities Act, which provides for the utilizing of water in the Great Plains area near where it falls, thus treating water as a blessing instead of a curse.

For many years by building levees down near the mouth of the great streams, we tried to channel the water into the sea, thus working against nature with the consequent result that the beds of the streams became filled up above the surrounding valleys, and bringing about periodic floods that destroy the homes and properties of many people living in those valleys.

By starting at the sources and utilizing the water, holding it where it falls and in the tributary streams, water is being made to serve a great and useful purpose. Thus by working with nature from the time the water falls as rain, following it down through the tributary streams and on to the sea, the double purpose can be served of making use of this great essential of nature and at the same time preventing many of the great floods that have caused broken homes and cost millions of treasure.

HOMES

Seventh. We have established the home-purchase program, which provides a method of purchase and payment of family-sized farms on a long-time amortization basis. No one can deny the value of a home in adding strength to our national life. Communism and the various other "isms" can gain little foothold among a home-owning citizenship. This program strikes deep at the heart of our national security. Contact with the soil adds a vital spark to the patriotism of the people.

PRICE AND INCOME

Eighth. The most important element in any farm program is the price of the product and the income of the farmer. The price of the product is too low. Much remains to be done along this line. Even so, we have come a long way from the days of 15-cent corn, 30-cent wheat, and 5-cent cotton that prevailed during the dark days of 1932.

In addition, the cash income of the farmer for the past year has been more than double the cash income of the farmer in the year 1932. Of course, the other wings of the program have helped both in the income and the living standards. Farm buying power was 72 percent greater in 1939 than in 1932. The added purchasing power of the farmer has stimulated industrial activity throughout the land, thus adding greatly to our national income.

There are some 200 basic farm commodities produced within the United States. They differ so widely in their nature, production methods, and marketing conditions that it is difficult to keep the price and income from all of them at a proper level. The changing demands frequently complicate the problem. For instance, the price of hogs is relatively lower than for most other farm commodities. This is partially due to the fact that for several years doctors have recommended the discontinuance of lard as a cooking compound. They have recommended against the use of fried meats. They have frequently recommended that in their diets people refrain from eating pork and pork products. In many homes of our land, lard has fallen into almost complete disuse. This loss of the demand has been a hard blow to the hog producer. You will recall during the war the slogan, "Eat less beef." It took the cattle producer many years after the war to sell the American people again on the thought of eating beef.

In addition, all of the farm commodities, especially those produced in surplus quantities, have been handicapped because of unsettled world conditions and the fact that the purchasing power of other nations has greatly diminished.

During the twenties we artificially sustained our foreign markets for farm and other products by lending more than $8,000,000,000 to foreign countries between 1921 and 1929, for the purpose of stimulating foreign purchases. If a man were running a grocery store, he could maintain a good business by financing the purchases of all his customers, but of course pay day would finally come.

In addition, we further curtailed our world trade by the passage of the ultra high Tariff Act of 1930. The only way foreign nations could possibly pay us the loans or any part of the loans which we made either during the war or in the 10 years following the war, was by accepting some of their production in exchange. We saw fit to largely exclude foreign products from our markets. In doing so, we struck a tremendous blow to all our commodities which are produced in surplus quantities. A number of our major products fall in this classification.

THE LAND

One of the tragedies connected with the question of price of farm products has been the fact that land speculation has come into the picture every time farm prices have reached anything like a fair basis. This has been true not only in our country but in every other country. It is a historical fact in every country where the rights of private property are recognized. A fair price for farm products is the most vital and essential thing that can be accomplished. In order to prevent the tragic ups and downs and the foreclosures that have always come when depressions have followed booms and land speculation, a land program is essential if we are to approach a solution of the farm problem.

For this reason many of us have advocated all along that soil and other benefit payments should be on a graduated scale and that the amount of them going to any one person, firm, or corporation should be drastically limited. In other words, that the encouragement in this whole field be, insofar as practical, on a family-size basis.

God created the land as man's greatest inheritance. It is essential to life. If one man owned and controlled all of the land in the United States, all other people would be subject to his whims. While land titles are a State matter, the National Government should avoid any action that would tend to place that ownership in fewer hands. The States and counties could assist in this matter by limiting the taxes on small homes.

PRICE FIXING

For many years some have advocated an upset price for farm products. This has been tried in many fields and in many countries, covering hundreds of years. It has never worked out satisfactorily except on a temporary basis. It was first tried nearly 1,700 years ago. Over a period of time it has often worked out to the disadvantage of the ones it was intended to serve.

It may be tried again. It is possible that we have learned some of the difficulties and could make it effective.

I want to say this, however. I feel that it would be absolutely necessary, if such a plan were tried out as to any one or more commodities, to make an individual allotment to the various farms or farmers of that part of the domestic consumption which it would be their privilege to market. Otherwise, too great a portion would be produced on a large-scale basis by mechanized and power farming. If some provision were not made, the tenants would in many instances be driven from the land by the suitcase farmer and those who own or control large tracts and who would produce great quantities of the commodity.

If such a program were fashioned, I think the penalty clauses should be removed so that anyone might produce for the foreign market without restriction.

RESEARCH

Ninth. We have made provision for research into new uses and wider markets for the products of the farm. In the field of chemurgy much can be accomplished. As a matter of fact, a chemical revolution is going on throughout the world. Many new and useful articles are being made out of the basic raw material that is produced on the farm. We have established four great laboratories in the major farm-producing areas of America for the sole purpose of studying new uses of all of the different farm commodities that are grown in our land. When these four great laboratories are in full operation, supplemented by the intensive work that has been provided through the various land-grant colleges and supplemented by the further activity which is being carried on by many of the different States, a wider field of distribution can be achieved. There can be no difference of opinion about the wisdom of this field of activity.

THE CAUSE

More than 160 years ago Thomas Jefferson, whom I regard as the greatest political philosopher who ever lived on earth, wrote the Declaration of Independence. In the first part of that declaration he laid down what I regard as the most basic fundamental of free government, that of equality for all citizens in the application of its laws. His expression, "All men are created equal" has been quoted as often as any phrase in our language.

Just a few years later, while that statement was still fresh in the minds of the people, and after they had won their independence, Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, submitted his report on manufactures on December 5, 1791, advocating for the first time in this country the adoption of the principle of protection. This is a very interesting treatise of about 80 pages.

The philosophy of protection was advanced as being in the interest of infant industries, which in no other way, he claimed, could compete with the established industries of the Old World.

I do not accept the political philosophy of Alexander Hamilton, but whatever one may think of his views, he had intellectual integrity. He realized it would be charged that his proposal was in the interest of special groups. He realized that it would be especially burdensome upon the farmer. Hamilton knew that he would be attacked by the other group of political philosophers. In this report he comments on the fact and suggests as a remedy that the farmers be paid a bounty as an offset to the tariff. I quote:

> Bounties are sometimes not only the best but the only proper expedient for uniting the encouragement of a new object of agriculture with that of a new object of manufacture. * * *
> It cannot escape notice that a duty upon the importation of an article cannot otherwise aid the domestic production of it than by giving the latter greater advantages in the home market. * * *
> The true way to conciliate these two interests is to lay a duty on foreign manufactures of the material the growth of which is desired to be encouraged and to apply the produce of that duty, by way of bounty, either upon the production of the material itself or upon its manufacture at home, or upon both. In this disposition of the thing the manufacturer commences his enterprise under every advantage which is attainable as to quanity or price of the raw material; and the farmer, if the bounty be immediately to him, is enabled by it to enter into a successful competition with the foreign material.

The tariff was not adopted at that time, but a few years later certain groups came together and took one wing of that philosophy. They took the protective wing, but forgot, in their eagerness to secure some advantage, to take up the other wing. The farmer thus became the first forgotten man.

NOT A SUBSIDY

Some of the critics have complained of the amount of money that is being expended on the program and have repeatedly referred to it as a subsidy. Everything that is being expended on every wing of the agricultural program can be fully justified, not as a subsidy but by way of restitution.

The value of manufactured commodities in the United States in the year 1937 was $60,000,000,000. More than 80 percent of these items are protected by the tariff. The average rate of the tariff, reduced to an ad valorem basis, is approximately 36 percent, according to the Tariff Commission. If this tariff is 33⅓ percent effective, it means increased industrial prices of nearly $6,000,000,000; in other words, a subsidy to business of the major portion of that amount.

Producers of what are known as surplus agricultural commodities receive no benefit from the tariff. Cotton farmers, for instance, are in this class. At the same time they assume the burden of increased prices on the articles they must buy.

So long as we have a tariff the surplus-producing farmer is entitled to an offset. This is a right. It is only restoration. Alexander Hamilton, patron saint of the tariff, recognized this fact. Thomas Jefferson wrote the principle of equality into the Declaration of Independence before we had a Constitution.

I am not arguing the merits of the tariff, although I have never believed in the high protective system. I am simply stating that so long as we have that system the surplus-producing farmers should have some provision for placing them on an equality under the law.

THE STAMP PLAN

Tenth. Provision has also been made for widening the distribution of the surplus products of the farm, both at home and abroad, emphasis being placed on widening the distribution of these commodities and the products thereof among low-income groups within our own land.

I am very proud of the fact that the provisions of section 32 were worked out by the members of the House Committee on Agriculture, which provides for a direct appropriation of 30 percent of all tariff collections for the purpose of this section. Under this provision, together with supplemental funds appropriated for the same purpose, the so-called stamp plan has been put into operation.

This plan has proved both effective and popular. It serves a three-way purpose: In the first place, it assists in disposing of our surplus products. Second, it tends to furnish additional food and clothing for the low-income groups in our land. And third, it tends to provide further employment. In truth, it stimulates employment in the regular channel of commerce activity. When an additional bale of cotton is grown and thus distributed, it furnishes additional employment in the plowing, in the planting, cultivating, and picking of the crop; also in the ginning, weaving, garment making, and wholesaling and retailing of the product that is made therefrom. The same is true of a bushel of wheat, a bushel of corn, or of milk and its products, as well as any other useful commodity that is produced on a surplus basis.

I am not quite sure but that it would be wise for some of the work-relief funds to be expended in this way. I am rather impressed with the thought that $100 expended in this fashion would provide more work in the whole field of activity than would be provided by the use of the same sum in direct work relief.

To make available to our own citizens who need them, food and clothing is one of the fine purposes accomplished in this activity. The additional work made possible all along the line is an added argument that is irresistible. Counties and cities throughout our country are clamoring for the advantages of this ideal method of using the basic wealth of our land.

After all our main problem is one of distribution. We have mastered the machinery of production to a far greater degree than we have mastered the machinery of distribution. I have always felt that in the final analysis there has never been in the history of our country an actual surplus.

There has never been a bale of cotton produced but that somewhere, here or abroad, is a man, woman, or child that needs the clothing which that product makes possible. There has never been an article of building material manufactured but that somewhere in this or other lands there is some person who needs the shelter that that commodity can furnish. There has never been a bushel of wheat, a bushel of corn, or any farm commodity grown by the blessings of Mother Nature but that somewhere out yonder under the stars is a hungry mouth that needs to be fed.

I have never believed much in the penalty clauses. They are temporary expedients. They are used only when two-thirds of the farmers producing a commodity feel that they are necessary. In the process of the years we should produce all that the people of our country can use, as well as all that may be appropriately supplied in the markets of the world. Whatever may be necessary to handle the difficulties of the time the major objective must always be a full supply for every need of the human race.

Amid all the divergent opinions, the confusion of suggestions, the wealth, and the multitude of plans we have worked out a program and are improving it from time to time. This effort has crossed party lines and found men who were willing to submerge themselves in the interest of the cause.

WAR CHANGES

The war may bring vast changes in the trade and marketing practices of the world. This may make it necessary to have drastic changes in the farm program, both as to marketing and producing. In the light of these rapidly changing conditions no one can foretell just what legislation may be needed. The Congress will pass the requisite legislation to fit these conditions when they have become settled. But whatever changes may be made necessary the essentials of the present program, to wit, soil and water conservation, low interest rates, research, rural electrification, home ownership, and surplus distribution will remain the basic foundation for the future of American agriculture.

My one message to the American farmer is to stick—stick to those who are honestly trying to find a solution for this great problem. Progress is being made. Six million farmers are now cooperating voluntarily in the various wings of the farm program. Operating as a unit this is a mighty army. Behind the farm program is more than 50 years of discrimination. To remove that discrimination and thus restore our Government to first principles is our primary national duty and is worth the effort of years.

Before you join the anvil chorus ask the farmer if he believes in soil and water conservation, if he believes in the lower interest rates, research, surplus distribution, rural electrification, and marketing agreements. Ask the 6,000,000 farmers who are now complying if they wish to repeal all these acts and again chase the rainbow.

I am not afraid of what their answer will be. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In my brief stay in the House of Representatives I have found no Member who has such a broad view and keen analysis of this whole farm situation as has the gentleman who has been addressing us. No Member can surpass him and few equal him in disinterested service to American farmers. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I mean every word very sincerely. The best friend which the farmers have in Congress is now facing us in the well of the House. We have listened to a masterly address from him.

I want to recall a point or two, referring to No. 6, for instance, which the gentleman made in regard to water conservation. Out in the West where he and I come from, where water is life, it is not only a matter of storing it on the big waters and little waters of these great river systems to prevent floods, but a matter of conserving it in surface or underground reservoirs to make possible the use of this indestructible element over and over again. We must conserve it and utilize it as if it were lifeblood—and indeed it is very similar to lifeblood.

May I ask a question? Is this wishful thinking on my part or is it possible with the right system that this great, rich country of ours can feed all the American people all they need to eat, and half the world besides, and do it without grinding down our farm labor? Is there a future for our farm people as happy as it is useful?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I agree with the gentleman as to the value of water conservation and with all he has stated in reference to that great western country. In history many times the valley of the Nile has been referred to as a rich country.

There is no spot of its size on earth that is anything like as rich as the valley, the water from which runs into the Mississippi from the various tributary streams that flow into that great river. There are some places in that Great Plains area where the soil is approximately 3 feet deep. I know of no other country, except where the sediment has formed near the mouth of rivers, where there is anything like the depth and richness of soil that prevails in that great western country. What it needs most is a proper use of the water that falls.

We have for many years treated water as a sort of a curse instead of a blessing. We tried to get rid of it. We channeled it to the seas. We built great levees near the mouths of rivers and allowed the sediment to build up the bed of the river higher than the outside territory, thus complicating the problem. The soil gets hard out in the Great Plains areas and when rain comes with a dash, it runs off in these streams. That is a tremendous area. I have seen the Canadian River, for instance, which is nearly dry a good portion of the time in New Mexico and the Panhandle of Texas, become such a roaring current that the Santa Fe Railway for a period of 3 days had to cease running its trains through.

It carried its passengers across on a basket attached to a wire cable. Those fast California trains would come up to one side of the stream and the passengers would be carried across by these baskets.

I think there is a great chance to develop that country so that it can feed the Nation by itself. It is a vast reserve of strength for the Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Did the gentleman notice that the political party meeting in Philadelphia last week resolved that the control of production should be abolished?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. What would be the effect if that policy was carried out and there was no control of production of cotton, wheat, and the various articles we have to produce?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is a great deal of speculation as to what would be the result if industry, having control, controlled its output, and agriculture makes no effort to provide a method of doing so in an emergency. I have always felt that the other program, properly safeguarded, would largely remedy the situation and control was only placed in the bill as a last emergency when surplus piled up to where they could not be properly handled. The difficulty of not having some machinery for control of surpluses is that they get completely out of hand.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Our critics have condemned us severely, and I believe unjustly, for what they charge as "paying farmers for keeping land out of cultivation." The gentleman envisions a brighter and better future for American agriculture. This system which he supports, with its controls, is by no means an economy of scarcity, is it? The gentleman does not contemplate what would really be a policy of restriction on agricultural productivity, does he?

Mr. JONES of Texas. On the other hand, by linking it with storage reserves it assures against shortage. I never have believed in the philosophy of scarcity. I believe we should grow all that the market both at home and abroad will absorb. But as long as industry has a method of regulating its production, I do not see why the farmer should not have the privilege of doing that in emergency. It can only be done on vote of two-thirds of the farmers.

The law does not provide for pay for keeping land out of cultivation. It provides pay for soil conservation. In order to prevent the one-crop system, it conditions those payments on not putting too much land in any one crop.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not more necessary now in the face of our lost foreign markets than ever before?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not believe anybody can forecast the future, because you cannot forecast conditions. The whole world picture is changing so rapidly that it is pretty difficult to make any predictions.

Mr. PIERCE. May I say to the gentleman that I have served 8 years on the Committee on Agriculture with its chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], and I wish to say that the farmers of America owe him a debt of gratitude that they can never pay.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I merely wish to join other Members in expressions of admiration and sincere affection for the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. I am sure I express the sentiment of all Members of this body when I say that no other Member has served more devotedly to his duty or has enjoyed a deeper respect from his colleagues than the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.] I am sure that all will appreciate his informative and interesting address today. May I add that inasmuch as he is soon to leave this body, where he has served with so much distinction, we shall miss him and his wise counsel very much, and that his promotion to the bench will be an irreparable loss to this House. [Applause.]

Now may I ask the gentleman a question? With reference to the problem of solving the farm surplus, which is undoubtedly one of the most serious problems now facing our farmers, does not the gentleman believe that an extension of the operations of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation into every nook and corner of the United States would help solve the problem of surplus farm commodities?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe they do a very valuable work in preventing price collapses. Otherwise, when there are overwhelming surpluses, the price simply sinks to ruinous levels.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to speak for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am very fond of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and I know of his sincere work in behalf of the agricultural classes of the country, but, inasmuch as the gentleman figures on retiring from his legislative career, I should like to know just why he has not been able to bring his committee around to the point where they would agree that there should be price fixing for the essential farm commodities produced in America and consumed in America, so there would be some real security to farm life in the United States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to take 2 or 3 minutes to discuss that question. I do not know whether or not the gentleman was here when I discussed it briefly a while ago. It is not a simple matter to have price fixing. This remedy may be finally necessary, but it is a very far-reaching step. It would be difficult to tell where to stop. There are many commodities involved. It would be necessary to have penalties against the paying of different prices, or at least the paying of a less price. It would be absolutely necessary, in my judgment, if you had price fixing to have an allotment to the individual farm or farmer, otherwise the suitcase farmer and the mechanized farmer would run away with the ball.

I believe in a higher price for farm commodities, but one of the difficulties in all the nations of the world has been that land speculation comes in and eats up much of the profits of the farmers. There are people with money who can get control. People who have had a hard time, when prices get good and the price of land sometimes goes up, do sell out, and large land holdings develop. For that reason, if we are going to have such a system, if it should ever become necessary, it would be necessary to have a limitation on the amount that anyone may produce for the home market, and also a land program in connection with it.

There are 200 farm commodities. It is difficult to draw a dividing line among them. Then, it will be difficult to stop there because a great many producers of industrial products will want their prices fixed. I do not know whether a price-fixing economy will work out completely. I know that in many instances where they have tried price fixing it has not worked out to the final benefit of the people. Competing fabrics and products made the field. Also the genius of man invents substitutes and synthetic commodities. It is difficult to force buying. We fixed the railway rates, for instance, and the railways are nearly all broke. It was fine as long as they had a monopoly, but their competitors have come in and invaded the field.

This is not a simple proposition. It has to be studied thoroughly and worked up to gradually. We have many fine things in the present program that should never be abandoned. We should build on solid ground. At any rate, as the gentleman knows, I have been interested in this problem, and have tried to keep an open mind on it. I try not to foreclose on ideas. We are building. We are building for the future. Age-old ideas are being discarded. We must meet new conditions, but we must not lose what we have gained. We must make any changes gradually. We must be sure of the steps we take. I do feel that the present program has accomplished much, and that it is thoroughly justified as the farmers' right in connection with any tariff system the country may adopt. [Applause.]

STREAM-POLLUTION BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on May 1 of last year what is known as the Barkley stream-pollution bill passed the Senate. On March 1 of this year it passed the House with amendments. Conferees have been appointed and have had several meetings. There is one amendment on which the conferees are unable to agree, and that is what is known as the Mundt amendment. I want to give notice that on next Tuesday I expect to call up a privileged resolution asking for the instruction of the House as to what the House conferees shall do with regard to that amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman mean tomorrow or a week from tomorrow?

Mr. MANSFIELD. A week from tomorrow. I want to give this notice now so that all parties may have an opportunity to be here.

Res. 222) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Maryland and West Virginia and the Commonwealths of Virginia and Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia as signatory bodies, to enter into a compact for the creation of a Potomac Valley conservancy district and the establishment of the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the State of Maryland, by chapter 320 of its acts of 1939, approved May 3, 1939, and the Commonwealth of Virginia, by chapter 324 of its laws of 1940, approved March 29, 1940, and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia acting pursuant to Public Resolution Numbered 74 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, chapter 891, of the first session, approved August 31, 1937, by resolution adopted April 16, 1940, have approved and desire to enter into a compact to create a Potomac Valley Conservancy District and to establish an Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin, to which compact by its terms the State of West Virginia and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are empowered to enter, and which compact by its terms becomes effective when ratified by a majority of the five signatory bodies thereto, and approved by the Congress of the United States, and which compact is as follows:

"COMPACT

"Whereas it is recognized that abatement of existing pollution and the control of future pollution of interstate streams can best be promoted through a joint agency representing the several states located wholly or in part within the area drained by any such interstate stream; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has given its consent to the States of Maryland and West Virginia, the Commonwealths of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and the District of Columbia to enter into a compact providing for the creation of a conservancy district to consist of the drainage basin of the Potomac River and the main and tributary streams therein, for 'the purpose of regulating, controlling, preventing, or otherwise rendering unobjectionable and harmless the pollution of the waters of said Potomac drainage area by sewage and industrial and other wastes';

"Now therefore the States of Maryland and West Virginia, the Commonwealths of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and the District of Columbia, hereinafter designated signatory bodies, do hereby create the Potomac Valley Conservancy District, thereinafter designated the Conservancy District, comprising all of the area drained by the Potomac River and its tributaries; and also, do hereby create the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin, hereinafter designated the Commission, under the articles of organization as set forth below.

"ARTICLE I

"The Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin shall consist of three members from each signatory body and three members appointed by the President of the United States. Said Commissioners, other than those appointed by the President, shall be chosen in a manner and for the terms provided by law of the signatory body from which they are appointed and shall serve without compensation from the Commission but shall be paid by the Commission their actual expenses incurred and incident to the performance of their duties.

"(A) The Commission shall meet and organize within thirty days after the effective date of this compact, shall elect from its number a chairman and vice chairman, shall adopt suitable bylaws, shall make, adopt, and promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary for its management and control, and shall adopt a seal.

"(B) The Commission shall appoint and, at its pleasure, remove or discharge such officers and legal, engineering, clerical, expert and other assistants as may be required to carry the provisions of this compact into effect, and shall determine their qualifications and fix their duties and compensation. Such personnel as may be employed shall be employed without regard to any civil service or other similar requirements for employees of any of the signatory bodies. The Commission may maintain one or more offices for the transaction of its business and may meet at any time or place within the area of the Conservancy District.

"(C) The Commission shall keep accurate accounts of all receipts and disbursements and shall make an annual report thereof and shall in such report set forth in detail the operations and transactions conducted by it pursuant to this compact. The Commission, however, shall not incur any obligations for administrative or other expenses prior to the making of appropriations adequate to meet the same nor shall it in any way pledge the credit of any of the signatory bodies. Each of the signatory bodies reserves the right to make at any time an examination and audit of the accounts of the Commission.

"(D) A quorum of the Commission shall, for the transaction of business, the exercise of any powers, or the performance of any duties, consist of at least a majority of the members of the Commission: Provided, however, That no action of the Commission relating to policy shall be binding on any one of the signatory bodies unless at least two of the Commissioners from such signatory body shall vote in favor thereof.

"ARTICLE II

"The Commission shall have the power and its duties shall be:

"(A) To coordinate, tabulate, and summarize technical and other data now available, or as shall become available in the future from any source, on the pollution of the streams of the Conservancy District and on the character and conditions of such streams, and to prepare reports thereon annually and at such other times as may be deemed advisable by the Commission.

"(B) To supplement existing information and data, and to secure new data by such investigations, analyses, or other means as may be necessary to secure adequate information on the character and condition of the streams of the Conservancy District as they now exist or may be affected by the future discharge of sewage and industrial and other wastes into the said stream.

"(C) To cooperate with the legislative and administrative agencies of the signatory bodies, or the equivalent thereof, and with other interested commissions and similar organizations for the purpose of promoting uniform laws, rules or regulations for the abatement and control of pollution of streams in the said Conservancy District.

"(D) To disseminate to the public information on the aims and purposes of the Commission and on the harmful and uneconomical results of stream pollution, through the issuance of bulletins, circulars, correspondence, literature and reports.

"(E) To cooperate with other organizations engaged in fact-finding and research activities on the treatment of sewage and industrial wastes or other wastes, and if deemed advisable, to institute and conduct such research and fact-finding activities.

"(F) To make and, if needful from time to time, revise and to recommend to the signatory bodies, reasonable, minimum standards for the treatment of sewage and industrial or other wastes now discharged or to be discharged in the future to the streams of the Conservancy District, and also, for cleanliness of the various streams in the Conservancy District.

"ARTICLE III

"The moneys necessary to finance the Commission in the administration of its business in the Conservancy District shall be provided through appropriations from the signatory bodies and the United States, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the several signatory bodies and of the United States, and in amounts as follows:

"The pro rata contribution shall be based on such factors as population, the amount of industrial and domestic pollution; and a flat service charge, as shall be determined from time to time by the Commission, subject, however, to the approval, ratification and appropriation of such contribution by the several signatory bodies. And, further provided, that the total of such sums from signatory bodies shall not exceed a total of $30,000 per annum.

"ARTICLE IV

"Pursuant to the aims and purposes of this compact, the signatory bodies mutually agree:

"1. Faithful cooperation in the abatement of existing pollution and the prevention of future pollution in the streams of the Conservancy District.

"2. The enactment of adequate and, in so far as is practicable, uniform legislation for the abatement and control of such pollution.

"3. The appropriation of biennial sums on the proportionate basis as set forth in Article III.

"ARTICLE V

"This compact shall become effective immediately after it shall have been ratified by the majority of the legislatures of the States of Maryland and West Virginia, the Commonwealths of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and approved by the Congress of the United States: Provided, however, That this compact shall not be effective as to any signatory body until ratified thereby.

"ARTICLE VI

"Any signatory body may by legislative act, after one year's notice to the Commission, withdraw from this compact." Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Maryland and West Virginia and the Commonwealths of Virginia and Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia to enter into the compact hereinbefore recited, and to each and every part and article thereof: Provided, That nothing contained in such compact shall be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting any right or jurisdiction of the United States in and over the region which forms the subject of this compact.

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires are known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. EXTENSION OF REMARKS

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, on May 21 I discussed some matter concerning the National Rifle Association. Since that time someone in Washington saw fit to spread a lot of propaganda indicating that I was responsible for an Executive order by the President, suspending the selling of firearms to the National Rifle Association. I had nothing to do with that suspension or with the Executive order.

Some of my colleagues have taken a lot of responsibility in extending their remarks on a pamphlet, which is propaganda, sent out by the National Rifle Association, without checking further into the matter. The gentleman from Alabama on page 4195 in the Appendix of the RECORD stated that he did not know where I got the information and that whatever information I got was not true. Mr. Speaker, it is undignified and unethical to make such a statement and I think the gentleman ought to know better than to charge another Member of the House with uttering statements that are untrue. In view of his accusation I shall put into the RECORD evidence showing that certain members of the National Rifle Association have solicited members among the Nazi bund, and that they have obtained certain members from the Christian Front. I want to stress again at this point that I am not charging the National Rifle Association as a whole of un-American activities. All I ask them to do is to clean their own house and to remove from their membership rolls certain groups that in my opinion are subversive.

In my files there are many letters commending me for my remarks on the National Rifle Association. But, there are also a number of letters criticizing me for my remarks and charging me with a desire to cast aspersion on the association as a whole.

I must again call attention to the exact wording of my speech, which appears on page 9915 of the RECORD, in which I stated—

> Mr. Speaker, the National Rifle Association of Washington, D. C., is being used and abused by the members of the German-American Bund.

I did not charge the association with doing anything improper but specifically charged that the association was being used and abused by the German-American Bund.

It is obvious that I did not intend to cast aspersion on the association as a whole, but merely charged that some individuals connected with the association saw fit to ally themselves with subversive organizations and solicit memberships from those organizations. The National Rifle Association, however, saw fit to put out a pamphlet in which it charges me with making destructive remarks, and with being responsible for the suspension by the President of their permission to sell and issue Government rifles and ammunition.

I wish to make it clear that it was not my exposure which was responsible for this action, but perhaps complaints coming from various sources, which will make it necessary for the association to purge itself of subversive elements, and perform its activities in accordance with the best interests of the country.

I also feel that it is the duty of each Member of Congress to prevent subversive organizations from taking over respectable institutions for their own nefarious ends.

The pamphlet of the National Rifle Association shows that some individuals connected with the Christian Front have been members of the association, and have been actively soliciting other memberships. It is these individuals who should be removed from the association, and then, I believe, no criticism could be made of its activities.

I have before me a statement by a respectable citizen of New York City, as well as other statements, showing the particular matter mentioned in my speech in Congress, and wish to refer to it at this time. I shall read it in full:

> On or about January 1938 I found a leaflet in my letter box announcing a meeting to be held at the Turn Halle at Eighty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City, by the Citizens Protective League, of which a Mr. Murtig was president. This organization is an offshoot of the German-American Bund.
> The subject of the meeting was to be The Impeachment of President Roosevelt. No admission charge appeared on the notice. I attended a meeting, over which Mr. Murtig presided and the swastika was very much in evidence.
> Petitions asking for impeachment of the President were signed by those present.
> During the course of the evening Mr. Murtig introduced a speaker who said he was a lawyer. The speaker reminded the audience that they were all aware of the fact that the black day was coming, and they could not afford to be unprepared as they knew who would be the first ones to be attacked. He said, "Now you boys know how to shoot, and in order to shoot you must have guns, guns of a uniform caliber." He let it be known that he was connected with the N. R. A. (National Rifle Association) in Washington, and he would vouch for all those who desired to become members and obtain these rifles at $3 a year membership. This met with a loud approval.
> Although no admission was charged, I was approached by a man after I was seated and was asked for a quarter for admission. This was probably due to the fact that I was recognized and it was thought that I would leave if I did not wish to pay admission. I paid the quarter and all the while he stood beside me. When I was ready to go I was followed all the way to the street.

In the association's pamphlet, some question is raised of the fact that I personally did not serve in the Army of the United States during the World War. Evidently the author of the pamphlet overlooked the fact that many members of my family were in the service, and that my brother was killed in action. This effectively disposes of any question of serving with the armed forces of the United States. I was also a member of the Advisory Council of the Draft Board of my district, acting on behalf of the Government on appeals, as well as in other similar capacities which required action on behalf of the Government. It is significant that a post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars is named after my brother, viz, Morris Dickstein Post, No. 462.

There is no question that the National Rifle Association was founded with the loftiest of principles, interested in the promotion of education in the field of arms and ammunition for the private American citizen. Thousands of Americans interested in hunting and in gun sports have found the N. R. A. invaluable in the purchase of guns, ammunition, and for the promotion of gun clubs, which in my opinion is an asset in both peacetime and at times when our great democracy is threatened by aggressor warlike nations. For the youth and adult to be familiar with firearms, in my mind, is of paramount importance.

My quarrel is certainly not with the splendid personnel at the head of this national organization. My issue is the lack of scrutiny as to interested people desirous of affiliating themselves with the N. R. A. for the sole purpose of carrying on activity inimical to our form of government.

In New York City a Dr. Sohler Bryant, a physician attached to the Murray Hill Hospital at 30 West Fortieth Street, has abused the purposes of the N. R. A. It is so arranged that members have the privilege of securing others for the N. R. A. Dr. Bryant, in his great zeal to carry on activities in the interest of the Nazi Government, has distributed application blanks at bund meetings, mobilizer meetings, and also at Christian Front meetings—especially active at the Manhattan unit of which Joseph Conlon was the leader. For further proof have the National Rifle Association check the records and they will find that my personal investigator, Richard Rollins, has become a member from the very blank distributed at a Christian Mobilizer meeting. In this application you will find the name of Dr. Bryant as the sponsor. Were the records to be carefully checked, the N. R. A. will find scores of bundsters and members of subversive groups who have used the identification card and purchased rifles for the day when they will use them against us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], who has just preceded me, I wish to say that up in my part of the country the most patriotic citizens we have are members of the National Rifle Association. There is nothing of a subversive character about them, nor is there about the national organization. I do not believe that the national organization in any way approves of any subversive activities. I think a great many of the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] in what he placed in the RECORD a short time ago, are very unfortunate and I think it has done a great wrong to a large number of patriotic Americans. I believe if he had called to the attention of the officers of this association, privately, anything of that character, if he has a legitimate complaint, they would have been cleaned up immediately. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

REPORTS AND COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 539) and ask for its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 539

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the information of its Committee on Foreign Affairs, the essential substance of reports and communications received by him or by the Department of State, from diplomatic sources or otherwise, concerning conditions in war zones in foreign countries.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Secretary of State be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 22, 1940.

The Honorable SOL BLOOM,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLOOM: I have received your letter of June 22, 1940, enclosing for my comment copies of House Resolution 539, requesting the President to send information to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

As you are aware, I am always glad to cooperate with your committee and to supply it with all possible information that I properly can to assist it. I regret, however, that the pending resolution covers such a wide range and involves research and editorial tasks of such magnitude that it would be practically a physical impossibility for the President to comply with it. In view of the foregoing, I see no reason for the enactment of this resolution.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTINENTAL AEROSURVEYS CORPORATION—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 861)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 10087, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, entitled "An act for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation."

This bill provides that the contract of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation of New York City with the Department of Agriculture, dated June 29, 1938, for the furnishing by such corporation to such Department, of aerial photographs of lands within certain counties of northwestern Pennsylvania, is extended to and including November 15, 1940. The bill recites that the contract expires, by its terms, on June 30, 1940, that the performance by the corporation has been virtually completed, and that irreparable loss will result both to the corporation and to the Department of Agriculture unless the time is extended.

In fact, the contract contains no fixed time for completion, but, according to its terms and subject to various provisions for liquidated damages, the contract is required to be pursued with diligence. It was contemplated by the Department of Agriculture that the contract would long since have been completed, and, in the case of three other contracts entered into with other contractors at about the same time, and for areas of similar size in Pennsylvania, flying was completed on April 5, 1939, July 4, 1939, and July 16, 1939, respectively, payment and final completion following within 30 to 60 days.

The Department of Agriculture finds that the failure of the contractor to complete its contract within a reasonable period has been due to the contractor's failures and delinquencies, and recent investigation at the site of work by officials of the Department of Agriculture produced convincing evidence of the contractor's unlikelihood to perform expeditiously the balance of the contract. Wherefore, if the Department were to be bound under the terms of this bill to wait until November 15, 1940, for this contractor to perform, it would be deprived of the early receipt of photographic materials for which there has continuously been an urgent need.

I feel, therefore, that I am not justified in giving my approval to this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message of the President, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MEIER LANGERMANN—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 862)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, the bill (H. R. 9651) which would provide that Meier Langermann, his wife and son, formerly of Germany, although citizens of Poland, shall be admitted to the United States for permanent residence, notwithstanding any provision of the immigration laws.

It will be observed that, unlike some other bills of this class, it does more than merely waive the requirements of the Quota Act, but would also set aside the limitations of all immigration statutes in respect to this alien and his family. It does not seem to me to be advisable to grant an exception of such a broad scope in an instance, as is the case here, in which the proper administrative authorities have not had an opportunity to determine as to whether any member of this family would be barred by any substantive provision of the immigration laws other than the Quota Act.

In the light of these considerations, I find myself unable to approve this legislation in its present form.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message of the President, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. IRVINE—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 860)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, in its present form, H. R. 6891, entitled "An act for the relief of William M. Irvine."

The purpose of the enactment is to remove the statutory inhibition against the use of appropriated funds for the payment of compensation to aliens in the case of William M. Irvine, who was inadvertently employed by the Post Office Department during the period, July 1 to August 25, 1938, prior to the time he was admitted to United States citizenship, in order to authorize payment to him of compensation for such service including compensation withheld from him and compensation he had received, but later refunded.

To accomplish this purpose the Committees on Claims of both Houses of the Congress apparently intended that the first sentence of section 2 of the bill as reported should be worded to authorize and direct payment to Mr. Irvine of "such part of $304.05 as has not been paid to him, or, having been paid to him, has been refunded by the payee." See page 1 of the committee reports.

However, the print of the bill, as reported to each House and enacted, contained, in the first sentence of section 2, authorization and direction for payment of "such part of $304.05 as has not been refunded by the payee."

As enacted, the bill would improperly authorize double compensation to be paid to the employee for a part of his service, a purpose not intended, but would not authorize any payment to him for the larger part of his service, that part as to which he has refunded the compensation received, which was the principal purpose intended.

Under the circumstances I have no alternative, but to withhold my approval of the enactment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK E. SHANKS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 857)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6548, a bill for the relief of Isobell Shanks.

The bill proposes to pay to Frank E. Shanks, father and legal guardian of Isobell Shanks, of Waveland, Ind., the sum of $3,500, in settlement of his claims against the United States on account of injuries sustained by his minor daughter when the automobile in which she was a passenger was struck, on June 24, 1938, by a truck operated by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The evidence in this case indicated that the injuries sustained by the child might not prove of a permanently serious character; and if not, it is my opinion that they would not justify a payment of as much as $3,500. The attending physician made a statement on July 10, 1939, approximately 1 year after the accident, that the child's recovery might eventually be complete, although expressing some doubt on this point. In view of the question thus raised as to the present condition of the child, an investigation and medical examination has been made by an agency of the Government since the bill was enacted by the Congress to determine the present actual condition of the injured party. This investigation and medical examination disclose that the child has no permanent partial disability; that she appears to be well nourished and plays normally; that she has led her class in studies and has shown no change in personality since the accident; that the wounds received have healed in a satisfactory manner and there are no scars present causing disfiguration; and that there is no indication of any future pathological conditions or necessity for future treatment.

In view of the facts hereinabove set forth, I do not feel justified in approving the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY REID HUDSON—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 858)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 4142, for the relief of Mary Reid Hudson.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay to Mary Reid Hudson, of Henryetta, Okla., the sum of $3,000 in settlement of her claims against the United States on account of personal injuries received on March 27, 1937, when the automobile which she was driving was struck by a trailer which became detached from a truck in the service of the Works Progress Administration.

While there appears to be no question in this case but what there was negligence on the part of the Government truck driver, the information available does not indicate that the injuries sustained by the claimant were of such a serious character as to justify a payment of $3,000. A medical examination held on June 16, 1937, indicated that certain rib fractures would be healed within a short time; that the nerve injuries would probably clear up within about 6 months; and that if the wrist and spine condition did not improve, surgical attention could be resorted to. There is no medical or other evidence as to the condition of the claimant since June 16, 1937; and in the absence of evidence that the claimant did not completely recover from the accident within a relatively short time, I do not feel that I would be justified in approving the present bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

VERNON ATKISON—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 859)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 5592, for the relief of Vernon Atkison.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay to the legal guardian of Vernon Atkison, a minor of Greenville, S. C., the sum of $2,000 in settlement of claims against the United States for personal injuries received by the minor and property damage when he was struck on the morning of December 30, 1937, by a truck in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The minor child, hereinabove referred to, sustained a broken limb as a result of the accident, but there is no medical or other evidence available to indicate that the injured party has not fully recovered.

In the absence of current authoritative information as to the condition of the injured minor, I do not feel justified in approving the bill which involves a payment of $2,000 in settlement of this claim. It seems to me that the amount of $1,150 recommended by the Department of Agriculture, after having carefully investigated this accident and the injury resulting therefrom, would be a liberal recognition of the damages sustained.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF MAILS ON MOTOR VEHICLE ROUTES

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman advise the House as to whether the minority members have been consulted with reference to the amendment that is proposed and whether or not the minority members have approved?

Mr. ROMJUE. The bill as originally passed by the House had the unanimous support of the entire Post Office Committee, both Democrats and Republicans. In the Senate this slight amendment was added. I think it is a very good amendment. I understand there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant to the Atlantic Refining Co., its successors and/or assigns, a license to construct and maintain a pile dolphin and walkway thereto in the Delaware River at the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, in the State of Pennsylvania: Provided, That such license shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that the same will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected thereby: Provided further, That all or any part of such license may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes or for failure to comply with the terms or conditions of any grant hereunder, or for nonuse or for abandonment of rights granted under authority hereof.

Maki, of Escatawpa, Jackson County, Miss., the sum of $5,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said E. V. Maki on account of the loss of his son, Gaston Maki, who was killed on November 1, 1935, when the truck on which he was riding collided with a truck of the Civilian Conservation Corps bearing United States Department of Agriculture tag No. 12–171 and operated by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps named Howard Jones, said collision having occurred approximately 1 mile north of McHenry, Miss., on United States Highway No. 49: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. LOUIS J. BANDERET

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3768, for the relief of Louis J. Banderet.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louis J. Banderet, of Bay St. Louis, Miss., the sum of $83.82. Such sum shall be in full settlement of his claim against the United States for compensation for service rendered as temporary carrier on Rural Route No. 1, Bay St. Louis, Miss., from March 24 to April 6, 1938, inclusive, which payment has been denied due to the fact that at the time he was a star-route contractor: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: On page 2, line 1, after the word "contractor", strike out the colon, insert a period, and insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That Louis J. Banderet is hereby released from any liability to refund to the United States the sum of $251.07 received by him as compensation for service rendered as temporary carrier on rural route No. 1, Bay St. Louis, Miss., from June 16 to June 30, 1937; from August 1 to August 15, 1937; from December 1 to December 15, 1937; from December 16 to December 31, 1937; from January 1 to January 15, 1938; from January 16 to January 31, 1938; and from February 1 to February 15, 1938."

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Will the gentleman explain to the House what the purpose of the amendment is?

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, the bill as originally filed was for $82 and some cents, as I recall it, for services rendered for carrying the rural mail because the rural carrier had died suddenly. The question involved was whether or not he could be paid because he already had a contract as a star carrier for another route. This question was raised by the Comptroller. The committee approved the bill for $82.

After the committee approved the bill for $82 the Department, upon the recommendation of the Comptroller, came back on this man for the sum of $251 that had already been paid him and demanded that he pay this back. Obviously if he is entitled to the $82 he is entitled to the $251.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Has the committee considered this amendment at all?

Mr. COLMER. I have submitted it to them.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The whole committee has not considered the amendment?

Mr. COLMER. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the greatest concern of the Nation today and the most important problem before the Congress is the issue of national defense. Following our entry into the first World War, the Nation was shocked by the revelation that more than 500,000 young men examined under the first draft in 1917 were physically unfit for military service. That number constituted more than 16 percent of the number examined under the first draft. We were still more shocked by discovery that 25 percent of the young men tested were unable to read a newspaper printed in English or to write a letter home. But we may be shocked even more presently, literally, unless we take immediate steps to qualify the manhood of the Nation—physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually—for its defense.

I am reasonably convinced from previous statistics, that the census just taken will disclose the fact that we still have about 5,000,000 illiterates in the Nation, almost 5 percent of our total population, although Germany, with its Fascist dictator, has reduced the illiteracy of its population to 1 percent, as has also Denmark, Finland, and Norway, victims of fascism, and Switzerland, Scotland, Ireland, and England, whose fate now hangs in the balance.

It has been estimated that in dollars and cents, alone, the 5 percent illiteracy of the Republic costs us almost a billion dollars a year. In terms of potential danger to our institutions, our national safety, and our security it is probably infinitely greater.

The Honorable James M. Beck, an erstwhile Member of this body, while serving in the capacity of solicitor for the Department of Justice, estimated that more than 50 radical newspapers are printed in 26 foreign languages in our land; and that the joint circulation of this radical press, combined with the radical publications of foreign lands, circulated in the United States, totaled not less than a million issues a day.

In testimony presented before the Senate Military Affairs Committee in 1919, it was shown that at that time thousands of young men of the age of 18 lacked a grade-school education; that many were illiterate, that many spoke English only poorly, conducting their daily intercourse largely in some foreign language, and that many of them would have been rejected for service in the Nation's defense forces, because of their physical, mental, and moral deficiencies—most of which, however, could have been cured or corrected by adequate compulsory manhood training.

However much we may condemn Hitler for his military activities, Mr. Speaker, however objectionable to us may be the deadly effectiveness of the "blitzkrieg," however much we may fear and repudiate the institutions of the Fascist state, we cannot deny that Hitler has awakened us from a deadly complacency, compelled us to revaluate the civilization that we have developed through the sacrifices of the fathers, and aroused us to a recognition of the dangers that lie ahead for representative democracy at the hands of Fascist dictators, proletarian commissars, or "fifth-column" radicals.

But we should not fear war at the hands of Fascist dictators at this time. We do not voluntarily need to enter the conflict that now rages in Europe, even though the totalitarians have reduced their opponents to only one. We can avoid this conflict. We can avoid it if our leaders are determined that we shall not thrust ourselves into it. We need not become involved if our leaders will but conduct themselves in accordance with the wishes of the great and overwhelming majority of the American people and keep within the restraints of international law.

But although I believe we shall not become involved in this war on European soil, I do believe that the day of war against communism is steadily approaching. Today affairs in Rumania reveal the possibility of sudden change. That so far as we may be properly concerned war will not be waged upon the battlefields of Europe. It will be waged on American soil, for silently, insidiously, and surreptitiously the evil forces of communism are assembling even as I speak. Momentum has been given to their daily advance by the opportunities accorded them to participate in the operation and direction of our Government, the Government they seek to destroy. They occupy high place in the councils of the Nation. They have been permitted to entrench themselves in every department of Government. They have been able to fill the ranks of Government service with their fellow travelers—kindred conspirators who await only a crisis to strike down the institutions we revere and to accomplish their hateful purpose of destruction.

I already have stated on a previous occasion that we are estopped from pleading surprise at the belated discovery of a "fifth column" in our midst. We have been told and repeatedly warned of its existence by the distinguished chairman of our Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities and by his distinguished colleagues. But we heeded them not. What greater warning do we need now? Do we need to hear the whistling of bombs or the shriek of sirens while "fifth columnists" guide an invader across the land?

Long ago when we recognized Russia we drew the Trojan horse into our gates. From its eviscerated interior deadly "fifth columnists" have poured forth to deride our institutions, to mock our customs, and to ridicule our faith in God. Through propaganda of every sort they seek to destroy our homes, our schools, our churches, and our Government. They have entrenched themselves in our schools, and by textbooks such as those of Harold O. Rugg and others like him they pour poisonous venom into the lifeblood of the Nation. Nothing is sacred to them. They are bent upon destruction. They are determined upon the plunder of our cultural assets.

We have witnessed the hysteria of war growing upon our people. The penumbra of war already appears in administrative practices more closely associated with the conduct of war than with the preservation of peace. Yet we need to fear treason, and the treachery of the "fifth column" ever more than Fascist invasion.

America must arm. America must arm for defense. Fascist dictators have aroused us to the weaknesses of the Republic. The President has requested an enlarged military, naval, and aerial armament. Congress has granted every request made by the President and acted favorably upon all his recommendations for an effective increase in the Nation's military equipment. So far we have seen only slight results. All our improved and increased armament is still potential. Perhaps it is too soon for us to expect results. We have but begun the industrial expansion and adjustment necessary to produce the equipment we need. And I cannot refrain from a brief mention of the fact that we have deprived ourselves of the services of one of America's great industrialists because he has patriotically resisted the effort to compel him to produce for other nations while he insists upon producing for America alone.

But America must do more than arm. We must do more than appropriate vast sums for the industrial expansion necessary to produce the machinery of war and for war machines themselves, important as all that may be. We must draft into defensive training the manhood of the Nation. We must do more. We must draft into defensive training the womanhood of the Nation also. In short, we must provide at once for the universal, compulsory training of the men and women of this Nation for defense. We must draft the manpower of the Nation for training in the construction and operation of the greatest mechanized armament the world ever has known. We must draft the womanhood of the Nation for training in all the collateral arts of military operations—hospitalization, military and civil dietary operations, operations for the equipment of personnel in the field, the conduct of many industrial processes behind the lines, the care of civilian populations, and the education and care of the children of the Nation if war should necessitate their concentration or relocation. For this training all the men and women of the Nation between the ages of 16 and 40 must be drafted for compulsory training. Slackers in the Nation must not be permitted to cast upon the courageous and the voluntarily self-sacrificing the burden of defense while they remain too busy reaping profits from the activities of defense to participate in its conduct. All alike must serve.

But we must do still more than that. We must provide at once for the young women of the Nation who are properly qualified and who voluntarily seek it, an institution similar to or comparable with our Military Academy and our Naval Academy at West Point and Annapolis, respectively. There are as many young women in the Nation who seek training in the defensive forces of the Nation as there are young men at present enrolled in our great academies at West Point and Annapolis. They are as much entitled to an opportunity to train themselves for all the collateral activities of defense as are the young men of the Nation now receiving military and naval training at the expense of the Republic. They should no longer be denied this opportunity. The Nation will need them to assume the same relative leadership in the conduct of the collateral activities of war as we expect of the young officers we graduate annually.

Upon the recommendation of the President, Congress in 1933 provided for the creation of the C. C. C., a corps of 300,000 unemployed young men. The President stated that the program he recommended for the enrollment of these young men in conservation camps throughout the Nation would conserve our precious natural resources, create future national wealth, and prove of great moral and spiritual value not only for the young men but for the whole country.

As organized, the C. C. C. furnished a form of employment, vocational training, and educational opportunity for the unemployed youth of the Nation and helped them to contribute financial assistance to their families.

By the acts of 1937 and 1939, provision was made for the continuation of the program originally to 1940, and now 1943. In July 1939 the corps became a unit of the newly created Federal Security Agency. In the selection of the enrollees and in the work to which they were assigned, the War Department, the Labor Department, the Department of Agriculture, and the Interior Department all cooperated. The knowledge and machinery of the Army was used for the purpose of handling, caring for, enrolling, and preparing these young men for the work they were to do and for life in camp, although the enrollees did not engage in any military activities. Army officers, Regular and Reserve, were stationed in the camps to train the personnel in orderly and regular habits of self-discipline and work application.

Since only 11 percent of the enrollees of the C. C. C. had been graduated from high school, since only 38 percent, slightly more than one-third, had been graduated from elementary schools, and since many were unable to read or write, the educational program of the C. C. C. was based presumptively upon the combined program of making the enrollees better and more useful citizens and fitting them for some kind of job after their training period. Vocational training, therefore, including practical application in the field, was given prominent place in the program. But physical, cultural, health, and safety education was also included, the purpose being to build up the physique, to teach new habits of health, and to develop character. Presumptively these young men were given an education that was to make them better citizens.

Without any intent to disparage what has been accomplished by the C. C. C., without any intent to deprecate the purpose for which the C. C. C. was created, I doubt very much if the procedure adopted could have produced the results desired or whether the results desired have been realized.

It may, of course, be contended that the period of enrollment was too short to accomplish so much as was predicted or hoped for. It may be contended that the degree to which the experiment was successful compensates fully for the efforts made and the money spent. But, valid as such contentions might be, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the methods in effect in the camps as conducive to the results that reasonably should have been expected.

I contend that the spirit of the movement tended to militate against what should have been primary objectives. From the outset the psychological impression created in the minds of enrollees as well as their families was not that enrollees would be compelled to contribute even any effort for the benefits that were to be conferred upon them, but that as a matter of right they were entitled to this form of relief at the hands of Government. The psychological effect was not that of an opportunity created for improvement and development in the problems of citizenship, but rather relief in the form of food, clothing, shelter, and cash. The result in innumerable cases has been that instead of inculcating a spirit of self-reliance, self-confidence, respect for authority, an elevated morale, a spirit of civic duty and civic responsibility, we have inculcated a spirit of dependence and reliance upon Government as the giver of all good. Once the largess of Government was experienced enrollees sought, in thousands of instances, to return for more.

I do not complain of the small amount contributed by Government to these young men who were enrolled in the C. C. C. It was small enough, to be sure. They needed opportunity for improvement, and their families needed the cash allowance deducted from their compensation. But, I do complain of the spirit in which the enterprise was conducted. Instead of a spirit of civic duty and civic responsibility too many thousands of enrollees have emerged with an exhalted demand for civic rights. The attitude that Government owes every man support, a job, and protection has been but more deeply indoctrinated. It is a false psychology. It is a psychology foreign to the spirit of America; it is a psychology contrary to the development of free men in a representative democracy. It is not the spirit of our ancestors, of independent pioneers and sturdy frontiersmen. It is a weakening of the moral fiber of the manhood of the republic. It can culminate only in a nation of dependents with a vast percentage of the population dependent upon doles and relief and perpetual governmental support.

This is not the spirit of free enterprise, of free men, of independence. This is not the spirit of private ownership, of competitive enterprise, of inventive genius, of efficiency, of ambition. This is the deadly leveling of dependence upon Government, of governmental operation, of the communistic state. It is not the spirit of America.

Mr. Speaker, I propose a new philosophy for the enrollees of the C. C. C. and the N. Y. A. I propose that the young men and the young women of the Nation, beginning with those eligible for enrollment in the C. C. C. and continuing until the age of 40 shall be qualified by physical and educational training for all the duties of citizenship in the republic. Experience proves that we can qualify the men and women of this Nation physically; that we can correct physical deficiencies, that we can develop habits of healthful living. We have the medical skill and the medical genius to assure to every citizen of the Republic physical well-being and prolonged life.

Certainly we have the facilities to remove illiteracy—absolutely and completely. We have facilities to raise the standards of education in every department of our educational system. We can train men and women efficiently and effectively not merely for jobs but for jobs in which the safety of the Republic always will be insured. Had we adopted a different educational psychology when we created the C. C. C. there would be today a vast potential civilian army capable of adapting itself to the urgent demands of industry to produce the mechanized armament of modern warfare.

Instead of manhood discipline we substituted the psychology of adolescent inducement. We weakened; we did not strengthen the intellectual, the moral fiber of the citizens of the Republic. Condemn Hitler as we may, yet he has exhibited to the world a nation whose youth possess courage, capacity for tremendous physical endurance, eagerness to serve the nation, rigid discipline. If war comes upon us from Germany it will be this manhood of the German Reich with which we shall have to contend. Our policy concerning the C. C. C. has left us without a manhood power and strength that might have been ours.

Objection has been made to training young men in time of peace for duty in time of crises. Objection particularly was made against the training and education of the youth of the Nation under the guidance and direction of the officers of our Army. I have no fear of the training that the youth of the Nation might receive at the hands of the officer personnel of our Army. I do not fear to trust the youth of this Nation to men who have volunteered for service in the protection of the Nation from military aggression. I do fear to trust them into the hands of those who are afraid to fight for the preservation of the Nation, and whose political and social psychology is inimical to its welfare. It is my proposal to place the supervision of this new education for the young manhood and womanhood of the Nation under the power of Congress—representatives of the people. And if it be impossible under our present laws to have that supervision directly under the Congress it can be made effective indirectly.

I do not propose to disturb our present educational system in the least. Fundamentally, the education of our youth must remain a function of local government. My proposal does not conflict with that function. The details of adjustment can readily be worked out. Nor do I propose any interference with the system of higher education as it is now conducted in our universities and colleges—private or public. My proposal is simply to compel compliance with such compulsory training as the Congress may see fit to prescribe. Those who may be able to qualify through properly adjusted curricula or through the selection of courses designed to accomplish the purpose of the law will be accorded full credit for their accomplishments. Those who fail voluntarily to comply with the requirements of the law will be compelled to comply under the principles of the compulsory service contemplated by the law.

The program I propose is designed to meet the present threat to the orderly progress of representative democratic civilization. For that purpose it necessarily must be compulsory for no volunteer method ever has proved adequate to our national needs, and today war is being conducted upon a magnitude never before conceived of.

It is my proposal that we create and develop a program of national defense in which the young men and women of this Nation will be qualified to defend themselves, their homes, their institutions, and the blessings that the civilization we now enjoy has conferred upon them. In this world conflict between totalitarianism and communism on the one hand and representative democratic government on the other we shall need to defend the institutions we revere and respect. This war has demonstrated that we must revise our concepts of national defense and of our methods of training for such defense. But we need even more than training for defense. We need an educational development of the womanhood and the manhood of this Nation that will preserve the ideals for which the fathers gave their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to face boldly the present threat to the institutions of the Republic both from sources abroad and at home; both from without and within the gates of the Republic. I advocate and I strongly urge immediate legislation that will effecuate the defensive training under personnel loyal to the Republic of the young men and the young women of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I should like to ask what assurance the gentleman can give to the Congress and the country if this program of compulsory military training of men and women is put into effect it will not be under the control of the very Trojan horses that the gentlemen so properly condemned?

Mr. COX. I have introduced a resolution which, if favorably considered by the House and Senate and passed, would have the effect of protecting the youth of this country and the Nation as a whole against the dangers that you and I see involved in the organization and training of our youth under people of the Sidney Hillman type.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If Sidney Hillman is in control, that element is in control of the Government now. If the program is put into force and effect, will they not have control of the drafting of the manhood and womanhood of this country?

Mr. COX. I pray not. As a matter of fact, I reluctantly reached the conclusion to support compulsory military training. I know it means a breaking down of one of our traditional policies; yet I find in that a hope of breaking down the encroachment of this group to which the gentleman refers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I want you all to know that this point of order was not made at my request. However, I am thankful to face so many Members on this occasion, but following what I have to say there will be two speeches which will be well worth your while. The brilliant and eloquent gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has 1 full hour allotted to him, and he can yield for lots of questions, and he will be followed by an equally brilliant debater, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. When you listen to these two Representatives you will be repaid for coming out of your offices at this time. Nothing I have in this paper or nothing I may say is so clearly worth the time you spent in leaving your offices and coming here. Nevertheless, I am glad on this occasion to face so many of you, and if you are just patient I may yield back part of my time so I can turn the lions loose and see them perform in discussing, I imagine, the current political issues.

Before I address myself to the main subject of my remarks, may I say I am thankful that the party of Lincoln, Blaine, McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt has at last thrown the mask away and presented the real issue of this campaign in nominating their leader? You across the aisle have made the issue plain and clear in nominating as your leader and candidate for the Presidency the outstanding utility man of the Nation, a man who really stands for something—for complete monopoly of electric-power distribution by the private utilities, with holding companies in absolute control. We can analyze it in this campaign and see whether the people of this country want to follow along that line and take him for a leader in the White House.

I am well aware that all of this may be brushed aside and the real issue of the campaign which is now so plain may not come up at all on account of the terrific strife across the Atlantic Ocean. When we think of our cousins over there fighting, suffering, and dying, just to see who will rule in the world, it seems terrible. That may be the issue in this campaign, and the utilities and the question of private or public power and everything else may be lost sight of in the discussion of the question of defense, the question of outlining where our lines of defense are going to be and what we are going to do in case of the conquest of Great Britain, if that country breaks as France has broken.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was just wondering if the gentleman while defining the issues of this campaign is thinking of the senior Senator from Oregon, whom the Republicans also selected to head the ticket.

Mr. PIERCE. Our colleague the gentleman from South Dakota knows that is rather a tender point with me. I am personally a great friend and admirer of that candidate on the ticket. We in Oregon take great pride in his standing in the Senate and in the Nation. If you had turned the ticket around I could have found some good reasons, plenty of them, why it might prevail, but to put him in the shadow just simply to cover up the wrongdoings and wrong notions of the other candidate is not fair. You just put him on there to make your leading man more acceptable. He accepted, as a good soldier, to save his party.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I gather from what the gentleman from Oregon has said that he also means that Mr. Garner is in the shadow at the present time.

Mr. PIERCE. I realize that he has been; there is no question about that. Every Vice President accepts that place.

The gauntlet was thrown down at Philadelphia. Shall this country turn over solely to big business the function of delivering to the people a product that all must have? Shall these huge profits be reserved for the group in Wall Street? That is the issue of the campaign. Read the hearings of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held in 1935, when your standard bearer appeared, never dreaming of the Presidency, and opened up his heart and upheld the holding companies, with all their iniquities, 5, 6, 8, 10 blocks each on top of the other. They organized so they could divide up the spoils and not cut the rates for delivering a product that the people should rightly have at cost, namely, electricity. Do not forget that the oft-repeated statement made in this House is true, that the utilities—and by that I mean the private electric-power companies—are today capitalized and organized so as to earn dividends on more than $13,000,000,000, when we have the estimate of the Federal Power Commission that the total cost of their properties could not have exceeded half that. Therefore, they are playing for mighty stakes, $6,500,000,000 or more, perhaps. They want to freeze that capitalization the same as the railroad capitalization was frozen for the railroad companies by the Transportation Act of 1920.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the gentleman say something about turning the Government over with the cream all skimmed off? I did not quite catch that. The gentleman said something about turning something back with the cream all off.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What was that?

Mr. PIERCE. What I mean by that is that the utilities are raking off the profit in delivering and selling electricity to the people. That is a public necessity and should be delivered to the people at cost.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thought the gentleman meant that the New Deal has skimmed the cream all off and left us that $45,000,000,000 debt.

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, no; I am not yielding on that point.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You have not anything else, but we have.

Mr. PIERCE. The one thing today that is an absolute necessity is electric power, and power should be delivered to the people at cost, and the cost is half or less than half of what is now charged in rates. The oft-repeated statement that a billion dollars—one thousand million dollars—more is being collected from the people than should be collected is a true statement. The line of demarcation, to my mind, between what should be private and what should be public property is what constitutes a natural monopoly. Electric current is a natural monopoly. There should be but one system delivering it in any town. Since it is a natural monopoly, it should be owned by the people. There should be only one power line delivering power in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, or elsewhere, and that should belong to the people. You cannot regulate the private utilities, because they regulate the regulators. That is the issue of the campaign, and the gauntlet that you have thrown down at Philadelphia we will accept in 2 weeks in Chicago when we present our issues for the political campaign. I am hoping, sincerely hoping, that this clear-cut issue will not be overlooked if this terrible war is ended and we consider our national economic problems.

The paper I have written for my allotted time today is about a little town on the Columbia River, Cascade Locks, near the Bonneville Dam. The Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River is almost on a line between the district of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] and my district. The dam and the power plant are in his district. The backed-up water is in my district for miles. This village, with less than 1,000 people, wanted to distribute Bonneville power to its citizens, and it found the way to do so. The people were resourceful, and the story is worth while. I shall read a part of it, and, inasmuch as you have been so patient with me, after I have read a bit of it and have brought out some of the points I am going to ask unanimous consent to put it in the RECORD, and than I shall yield to the lions and let them tear each other to pieces and we can enjoy seeing them perform.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

CASCADE LOCKS BLAZES THE TRAIL—THE STORY OF AN OREGON MUNICIPAL ELECTRIC PLANT

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, a periodical of national circulation recently commented on the outstanding results of the activity and far-sightedness of a small community within and adjacent to a city of 686 people in the Oregon district which I have the honor to represent in Congress. That paragraph says:

Distribution of current from the Bonneville power project is demonstrating to the people within its radius the value of these great public undertakings which were initiated by the New Deal. Citizens of Cascade Locks, Oreg., where the current from Bonneville has just become available, are finding that their bills for electricity are between 30 and 40 percent less than they have been before.

Municipal operation of electric light and power facilities was begun in Cascade Locks less than a year ago. The determination and good judgment of the citizen leaders of the movement has resulted in the very unusual record for any new business or the benefit of students of public ownership and of other localities hoping to use the electric power generated at the great Government Bonneville Dam project on the Columbia River, I am reciting the steps in the development of the Cascade Locks system. This recital will, I am sure, be valuable to Members of Congress who pass on Bonneville legislation and as a guiding example as well as an inspiration to citizen groups in the Pacific Northwest contemplating some form of organization for the distribution of Bonneville power carried over Government transmission lines to city gates and to rural communities. These communities must, perforce, set up their own distribution systems to carry the current into homes, local industries, and business houses, and to the scattered farms, which add to the financial perplexity of publicly owned distribution systems.

TYPES OF DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS

In Oregon public-ownership advocates have under consideration three different types of distribution systems. The first is straight municipal ownership, such as Cascade Locks established. This may extend beyond the city boundaries and serve outlying territory adjacent to the city. Second, rural electrification projects organized outside city boundaries and limited by Federal law to territory not already covered by private utility lines. Third, public-utility districts—P. U. D.'s—which may embrace city and country and must be set up, under the Oregon law, by an election. In the campaign preceding the election, the conflicting interests of city and country often weaken the cause of public operation and predetermine failure. It appears that the rural electrification program is the one which now appeals most strongly to the rural communities, as they may more easily set up projects which can later be brought into a unified system in connection with other R. E. A.'s, using a city system as a nucleus.

BONNEVILLE TRANSMISSION LINES AND RESERVATIONS

The first and third sessions of the Seventy-sixth Congress, spurred by the necessity of providing additional power for defense industries, and by the fact that the power now generated at Bonneville Dam has been almost entirely absorbed through contracts with existing private utilities, municipal plants, and the many public-utility districts in Washington, made appropriations specifically for transmission lines to carry Bonneville current eastward through Oregon and Washington. Previously, the high-powered transmission lines had been constructed westward to the population centers near tidewater, and into territory reaching toward large private power systems which may soon have urgent need for more current.

The Bonneville Act provided a reservation of 50 percent of the generated current for the use of public power districts. This was done in order to give such districts an opportunity to perfect organization which was made difficult in Oregon by certain weaknesses in the State organic act, but proceeding with great speed in the State of Washington. My bill, passed by this last Congress, extended the reservation period from January 1, 1941, to January 1, 1942. This offers an incentive to immediate action and allows an opportunity for amendment and revision of the Oregon P. U. D. Act during the next session of the Oregon Legislature, beginning in January 1941.

OREGON MUNICIPAL PLANTS SUCCESSFUL

This brief factual history of the Cascade Locks municipal plant is set forth step by step in order to make available a typical organizing experience which has been amazingly successful for a new venture undertaken against great odds. The statements are drawn from correspondence with the manager of the system, from its audited statements, and from newspaper clippings kept in my files during the progress of the undertaking.

The patrons of the municipal system at Cascade Locks are rejoicing over a reduction of 40 percent in light and power bills and a net income which has allowed the management to build up a sinking fund to buy its own bonds before maturity. The use of electrical equipment has been vastly increased, offering further proof of my theory that lowered rates result in selling larger quantities of electricity, actually producing greater income. On several occasions during the past few years I have presented to the House stories of remarkable accomplishments by public power plants at Milton, Oreg., in my district, at Eugene and Canby, Oreg., and at Tacoma, Wash. To this list I now add the inspiring narrative of results accomplished since its beginning on July 25, 1939, by the public power plant of the small city and community of Cascade Locks. This shows the course which may, and probably must be, followed by other communities.

BONNEVILLE'S FIRST MUNICIPAL CONTRACT—HOW IT CAME ABOUT

The Cascade Locks contract was the first contract for current negotiated and secured by the Administrator of the Bonneville project. The little city is located in the immediate vicinity of Bonneville Dam, and has had a remarkable growth since the construction at Bonneville was started. By the time the first generating units were completed and ready for operation, the people became interested in city-owned power distribution, and formed a citizens' committee which conducted a survey to determine the feasibility and practicability of such a project. This survey indicated material benefits which would accrue to the city. In Oregon, the State hydroelectric commission investigates the proposed P. U. D.'s and reports to the people on their feasibility. Cascade Locks petitioned this commission for a hearing. As a result of that petition the State commission reported in July 1938 as follows:

If the district could secure a distribution system of the quality contemplated in the estimate, at a cost of $35,000, and the estimated market could be obtained, the system could be operated at a profit.

The commission recommended, however, that the original proposed district of 45 square miles be reduced to 13 square miles, thus eliminating uninhabited portions. The proposed district then would have about 320 customers, would sell a total of 307,237 kilowatt-hours for an estimated revenue of $16,369.37, not including industrial users, because there were none. It was estimated that operating costs would be $7,175 annually, and that an immediate reduction of rates could be effected.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP DETERMINED UPON

In the meantime the city council had cropped the P. U. D. proposal and had determined upon municipal ownership of the distribution system. It invited Mr. J. D. Ross, Bonneville Administrator, a competent engineer, and enthusiastic public power advocate to place a value on the West Coast Power Co. system in the area, and to employ a fiscal agent in disposing of any bonds which might be voted for the purchase of the property. Mr. Ross always took the position that public agencies proposing to engage in the power business should make fair offers for property of existing privately owned electric utilities, before entering into costly competition. The local private company served an area adjacent to the city, but there was not the difficulty sometimes experienced when public ownership unit boundaries differ largely from the boundaries of the private plants. Naturally, it is easier to negotiate a sale contract when the boundaries of the two agencies are the same. The private company which was, as is usual in Oregon, controlled by eastern holding companies, refused to give any answer to the proposal that they sell to the city of Cascade Locks their holdings in the Columbia Gorge. At this time, the franchise within the corporate limits of the city expired, and the city refused to grant a new one unless the company would sell their holdings or make reductions which would allow the people of the area to benefit by the low-cost power generated at Bonneville. Refusal by the company resulted in the decision of the people to go into the power business for themselves. The citizens then gave a magical and truly electrical performance in the construction of a backbone of their distribution system throughout the city. Donning overalls, they built the complete system between 12 o'clock Saturday noon and 8 o'clock Monday morning. It is said that every citizen helped in some way toward this amazing accomplishment. This episode convinced the power company that the citizens meant business, and it started a campaign of discouragement, hampering the project at every turn, and adding to its organization expenses, but as the manager says:

> However, this was merely peanut money to what the utilities spent in trying to keep us out of business, and it is a dead mortal cinch that some electric users throughout the country paid the bill.

Finally the security owners sensed the situation and agreed to sell their property.

COURT BATTLE NECESSARY

A long-drawn-out legal battle was necessary to prove the legality of the citizens' going into business by way of a revenue-bond procedure, and to validate the bond issue. The case was finally determined by the Oregon Supreme Court in favor of the city. This important test case concerned the status of of the bond issue for the purchase of the power company's holdings. The proposal to finance the purchase by the issuance of revenue bonds sold at a private sale set a precedent for other cities. The case was what is known as an agreed case, without action. In this manner a friendly suit was instituted in the circuit court, with all parties agreed on the points to be decided. Preliminary to the suit, the city recorder refused to sign a paper authorizing the issuance of the bonds. The city immediately filed a suit against him to force him to sign. The points at issue were: First, Is the charter amendment and resolution valid and binding? Second, Is the issuance of revenue bonds legal in the State or Oregon for this purpose? Third, May the bonds be sold at a private sale?

The circuit court held that the city recorder could not be required to issue the bonds because they had not been advertised for sale under the Oregon bond law. The city took the position that the revenue certificates to be issued in the financing of the purchase of the private utility properties were not in the strictest sense of the word "bonds," and therefore should not come under the Oregon statute which provides that all such bonds must be offered at public sale. The city maintained that these certificates were just promises to pay out of the income of the system and had no general obligation status whatsoever and therefore should not be considered as bonds. The high court upheld the lower court, ruling that the bonds must be advertised for sale and must not be sold for less than 95 percent of their face value. It also held that the revenue certificates were not subject to the State constitutional provision limiting the bonded indebtedness of the city.

With the supreme court decision rendered, the city did not find itself immediately in the power business, as there were many details to be worked out in connection with the purchase and rehabilitation of a run-down system, appointment of a manager, rate schedules, acceptance of property easements, rights-of-way, and water rights. Things did, however, move fast and on July 25, 1939, the city took control of the west coast holdings, after 2 years of fight in which the city neither asked for, nor gave, quarter.

THE FINANCIAL TRANSACTION

The requirement that sale of bonds with which to finance construction of publicly owned distribution systems must be advertised was regarded by the public power enemies as a complete vindication of their action in insisting upon legislation requiring competitive bidding for public utility district bonds. Before the forced resort to competitive bidding, Cascade Locks had discussed a private sale of a $79,000 block of 4½ percent revenue bonds at a bid of 0.95. Every effort was then made by private power companies to discredit revenue bonds in the financing of such systems. Certain private financiers upheld the assertion that the revenue bonds would sell easily and be a good investment. They believed the city would never have to revert to general obligation bonds to meet their payments. The firm which had agreed to purchase these revenue bonds at a private sale later bid on the bonds offered at public sale.

The advertisement was for an issue of $79,000, approximately $44,000 of which was to be paid for the holdings of the private company, with $35,000 allocated for "a general overhauling and extension program of the present system, and for working capital and reserves for the new company." The issue was sold at a bid of 98½ to yield 4¼ percent, the bonds to mature serially over a period of 20 years, but callable after 3 years. Because of the public offering and bid there was not the usual 2½ percent financing fee necessary. The city did pay $1,100 to a fiscal agent who advised on all financial procedures. They state that the $1,100 was an excellent investment because it resulted in a saving of $9,000 on the purchase price. The total difference in cost was not great and the disadvantages of advertising were slight. Delays were overcome by the purposeful activity of the local public power proponents.

Because the financing situation is one of the most difficult which public power systems must face, I quote from a statement made by the manager, Mr. Jack A. Flancher, in refutation of false charges of private utility propagandists against another proposed public ownership system:

> We sold our bonds by a plan and system resolution, whereby all the moneys received by our utility are placed in funds for certain specified things. No banker, I believe, would buy revenue bonds without being pretty positive that he was going to get his money back. Our books have been kept in the strictest accordance with the rules laid down by the Federal Power Commission, and they are satisfied that we are handling our business in a businesslike manner and are showing a fairly substantial growth in business and following sound operating policies. We have put into a bond account each month a stipulated sum, which goes for retirement of bonds, and a certain percentage for rehabilitation so that our lines will be as good when the bonds are paid off as they are today. A certain percentage goes for reserve, so that if any time we should have some hard luck, we would have a good reserve to fall back on. In addition there is a percentage set up for depreciation and renewals. I think anyone will agree that this is just good, sound, business practice. Every month to date we have met all our obligations and have had some besides.

The manager refers to the Federal Power Commission, so it may be stated that the contracting parties, the private utility, and the city made a joint application to that Federal agency which made the routine procedure allowing the transfer from the company to the city.

THE DEBT LOAD IS LIGHT

There is one fact that cannot be too often emphasized, and that is the matter of contrasting debt-reduction policies of private and public power companies. I have pointed out through many detailed studies presented to this House in speeches that private utilities pyramid their debt structures by new issues, and are forced to hold rates high in order to pay interest and dividends on these debt structures. The policy of the publicly owned plants has always been more cautious, and has resulted in lower consumer rates because the debts have been amortized constantly. This has resulted in giving the public systems investments upon which they may realize richly in the future when the loan has been completely repaid and the rates reduced to a sum sufficient to carry maintenance costs. This is the most important consideration in connection with publicly owned plants.

Cascade Locks bought the private system, paying for it on a basis equal to $93.30 for every customer served. The total outstanding securities of the Cascade Locks property at the start was $154 per consumer, compared with the national private power company average of $511.60 per consumer. The average cost of all the municipal plants in the United States is $264 per consumer.

Eliminating the cost of the generating station, this initial customer figure of $154 is only slightly higher than the best of the older municipal plants in the country. If it were not for trail-blazing litigation and the barriers set up by the private companies, Cascade Locks would have started off on an equal footing with the very best of them. However, this slight customer debt difference is such a small item that 20 months of rate saving on the present basis will wipe it out. The people of Cascade Locks have secured a substantial rate reduction, and, in addition, are building up a revenue-producing equity which will increase with time.

As a result of the wiser and more honest financial policies of the public plants, they have today in the United States, on the average, outstanding obligations amounting to only 35½ percent of their original costs, while the private companies have outstanding securities approximately 100 percent of their book cost.

The public plants have ever been the pathfinders and yardsticks. Bonneville as a yardstick has been the cause of reduced power rates in Oregon. No one can contemplate this situation without being convinced of the great advantage of the publicly owned plants, which are not obliged to carry the burden of the private holding companies, with their insatiable demands for tremendous funds, some of which are used for political manipulations in local, State, and Federal Governments. Private utility indebtedness, which they themselves have erected, is a barrier which makes it impossible for them to distribute advantageously the cheaply generated power of Bonneville Dam.

THE TEST OF SOUNDNESS

There is one simple test of financial soundness which can be applied to any earning statement and balance sheet. This test is the ratio of outstanding bonds and other fixed-interest securities to the annual gross earnings. A low ratio insures soundness and success. In the case of Cascade Locks, this ratio is 2.71 under a drastic rate cut which reduces revenues during the recuperative period and accordingly raises the ratio. This ratio will decrease in time. With 40 percent higher rates, all the private companies in the United States have a comparative ratio of 4 to 3. For the private companies adjacent to Cascade Locks this fixed-interest security ratio is as follows:

Northwestern Electric	4.08
Portland General Electric	5.45
Pacific Power & Light	6.10
Puget Sound Light & Power Co	7.74
Average of these 4 ratios	5.84

Translated into simpler language, this means that for every $1 of gross income Cascade Locks has $2.71 debt of fixed-interest securities outstanding. All the private companies in the country have an average of $4.30 debt for such securities—including preferred, but excluding common stock. The average northwest regional figure for private companies is $5.84 per $1 of gross income. Obviously, the smaller the amount of fixed-interest securities outstanding per dollar of income, the healthier the condition. This simple test eliminates all the so-called objections raised by utility propagandists. Any ratio below 3 for this type of plant is very conservative and sound.

OPERATING RESULTS—EARNINGS

I repeat that electric consumption always increases rapidly with substantial rate reductions. The Cascade Locks experience bears out the graphical prediction I made on this floor in a speech of July 27, 1937. The consumption at Cascade Locks rose so rapidly that the loss of revenue from the rate reductions was wiped out. After 11 months of operation the returns were about $6,000 ahead of the initial estimates. To date the city has met all of its contract obligations on time and has built up a surplus. The customer-use possibilities resulting from cheap power rates is just starting in this city.

The following figures show the results of 5 months of operation, up to December 31, 1939:

Gross revenue for 5 months	$12,156.31
Operating expenses	6,335.18
Net before depreciation	5,801.13
Depreciation	1,215.21
Net after depreciation	4,585.92
Interest charges	5,548.68
Net income available for taxes, amortization, and surplus	3,001.59

It will be noted that the operating expenses are only 52.28 percent of the gross revenue compared with a fair public-plant average of 56 percent. The Cascade Locks net revenue available for surplus was 24.7 percent of the gross. In 5 months $1,000 was paid on the bond issue, demonstrating that amortization on publicly owned plants can be started early. Before depreciation and amortization of debt discount, the debt service was covered 2.19 times, even under the drastic rate cut. From these net earnings the following reservations were made:

Debt reduction	$1,175.00
Bond-reserve account	655.00
Renewal-fund reserve	433.51
Transferred to earned surplus	738.07

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman tell us whether the T. V. A. has verified all those figures?

Mr. PIERCE. These are not T. V. A. figures. These figures have been verified by myself from the reports to the Federal Commission and to our Utility Commission of Oregon. I am not talking about T. V. A. You are going to hear plenty of T. V. A. in this campaign——

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The reason I asked that question——

Mr. PIERCE. That is going to be a real issue and we are going to find out whether we did pay Mr. Willkie $19,000,000 too much for the Tennessee properties a year ago, and who sold it to us and how we came to pay $19,000,000 more for that property than we ought to pay. You will hear plenty about T. V. A.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PIERCE. I am not going to yield further because I want to finish this statement.

A CONTINUOUS RECORD OF SUCCESS

News notes and captions in local and Portland papers afford a running account of successful management: "Cascade Locks Makes Money, Cuts Light Bills"; "More Power, Less Cost"; "City Light to Buy Back Six Bonds"; "City Light Finances Reported Good"; "City System Making Profits."'

It is a continuous record of making money and cutting electric bills through low-cost Bonneville power. It was this record of savings which led the city, after 3 months, to order a material reduction in rates. During those 3 months the city had sold 206,922 kilowatt-hours of electricity for $7,294.13. The first bond of the $79,000 issue had been acquired by the city, thus saving interest charges, and there was sufficient surplus to retire another bond. Like all expanding and flourishing businesses, they bought property in the heart of the city and moved into a small office building, properly equipped.

Customer consumption had in these first 3 months been increased over 40 percent, accounted for by the use of electric stoves, hot-water heaters, and other appliances which had previously been considered impossible luxuries. The operating costs, even of a new venture, were slightly lower than those of the former private utility owner.

The manager became the general adviser of the electric users, explaining to them the advantages of utilizing more power, telling them the actual cost per month for every type of appliance and emphasizing the savings under the new rates. A home with average lighting, radio, toaster, washer, and sewing machine, paid $1.80 under these new rates, as compared with $2.80 under the old plan. Electric ranges cost only $1.30 a month as compared to $3.45, and the cost of electric water heaters was reduced by half. It was arranged so that homes with inadequate wiring might be rewired, the cost paid back over a period of months, permitting the users to take immediate advantage of the low rates.

Since the earnings were accumulating in the bank and drawing no interest, the power committee of the city council decided to take $6,030 of the amount to buy in the last six serial $1,000 bonds. The bonds were placed in escrow so that at any time it was necessary to have this money returned to these funds the bonds might be sold and the money made available. They estimated that with the "dead" money put to use, the city light would make a saving of $4,962.50. Other bonds had already been bought so the total withdrawn from interest payments became $8,000. Pretty shrewd financing for newcomers in the utility field.

RATES

When the City Council of Cascade Locks authorized Mayor Manchester to sign a contract with Administrator Ross of the Bonneville project to deliver to the city an initial 200 kilowatts of power, the city became the first regular electric customer of the Federal navigation and hydraulic project on the Columbia River. When the city operation was started, current was supplied from the Bonneville Dam under its regular tariffs as filed with the Federal Power Commission. These tariffs are available to every municipality within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville plant. Any municipality or public organization located contiguous to the Bonneville transmission lines can practically duplicate the results accomplished by Cascade Locks.

Within 3 months after taking over the plant the city made a drastic rate cut. Under private ownership, the residential rates were from 7 to 2 cents per kilowatt hour. The public ownership rates put into effect in the fall of 1939 started with 4½ cents and broke quickly to 1 cent and ½ cent. Within 6 months the average residential rate dropped from 4.9 to 3.1 cents per kilowatt hour, a reduction of over 36 percent in unit price. The community rate savings, at present rates, adopted in November 1939 will be about $7,000 per year on 512 average consumers or $13.70 per consumer per year. This rate saving already represents 14.7 percent of the purchase price, and it will increase. Within 6 months, under this new rate, the use of electric stoves increased amazingly. Where there were only three stoves on the line when the city took over, there are now over 60.

Commenting upon the first fruits following Cascade Locks' creation of a public-power system, the State Master of the Oregon Grange said:

> This is a remarkable demonstration of what can be done under public ownership. Cascade Locks is not faced with the job of making profits for stockholders but they do want, of course, to make sufficient profits to retire their upkeep cost and pay off their obligations. Farmers in Oregon generally would rejoice if they could be assured of getting a reduction in the rates anything like 37½ percent.

The present rate schedule is as follows:

	Cents
First 50 kilowatt-hours	4½
Next 50 kilowatt-hours	2
Next 200 kilowatt-hours	1
Excess kilowatt-hours	½

TAXES

Under the Oregon law, public utility districts must pay taxes the same as if privately owned. Rural electrification projects pay taxes in accordance with State laws, like all cooperatives. Under the Oregon law, they pay property taxes on their lines, and the State unemployment compensation tax. They are not subject to the license fee on business corporations because they issue no capital stock. They do, however, pay the annual corporation license fee, the minimum being $10. They are exempt only from the State income tax on business corporations. Municipal electric plants do not pay taxes, nor do municipal water and sewer systems; nor are city halls and other like public investments taxed. These are not the only properties which are tax-exempt in Oregon.

As a matter of fact, no private utility ever pays taxes. They do not send in money from Wall Street. They have no source of tax funds except the funds they take from the community. Actually, the community pays the taxes in its electric rate and the utility is the collector, charging a high fee for making the collection. The private utility at Cascade Locks had a valuation of $109,000. It paid taxes, amounting to about $3,000 annually, on a valuation of less than $50,000. This utility was allowed, under the Oregon law, to earn a net profit of 7 percent on the $109,000, above all expenses, including taxes.

The public power plant has saved the community, in 1 year, $7,000 in residential rates and has earned for that community a substantial sum toward a community investment which will pay dividends for all time. When the debt is paid out, in less than 20 years, the city will own a handsome property. It will own its distribution system, debt free, and be a money-maker for the community. The consumers of electric power are now paying taxes in their rates just as they did when the private company owned the property. I have covered this whole subject very fully in a speech of July 12, 1939, on Private Utility Expenditures.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP IS RIGHT

The letterhead on which the facts about the Cascade Locks municipal power project was sent to me reads as follows:

> City light, Cascade Locks, Oreg.; Bonneville Dam Power; Nature's finest water; both municipally distributed.

Yes, this city not only owns its light and power; it owns its water system, sewer system, its streets, its schools, its libraries, and its public buildings. The State builds, owns, and maintains the roads which lead to that city. The Federal Government operates its post office—all the essentials of a satisfactory life are brought to the people through public ownership. It is reasonable to draw the public ownership line at the public utility which gives the most satisfaction and yields the greatest profits? Would it be right to forbid public operation of electric utilities just because an absentee investor or holding company of the Atlantic border demands the profits?

The community of Cascade Locks is certainly to be congratulated on its sound financial set-up, on the judgment exercised throughout its negotiations for acquiring the utility, on its patience through the legal struggle, and certainly upon the results accomplished in such a short period. The success has been especially noteworthy in the face of the barriers set up by private utility interests. From the beginning, its courageous mayor and council have taken the people into their confidence. Every step of the way has been explained and made clear. I am proud that such an enterprising community is in the Second Oregon district, which I represent in Congress. [Applause.]

WILLKIE NOMINATED FOR PRESIDENT BY UTILITIES—REPUBLICAN PARTY "BLITZKRIEGED," FOLDS UP—POWER QUESTION MADE CHIEF ISSUE IN COMING CAMPAIGN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to hurt the feelings, wound the sensibilities, or intensify the humiliation of the ex-Republicans in the House who saw their party fold up and disappear in Philadelphia, Pa., a few nights ago. [Laughter.]

If I might borrow from the lips of a great statesman, of a century past and gone, an apostrophe to liberty, revise it, and apply it to the Republican Party, I would say that in the historic city of Philadelphia, where the Republican Party raised its first voice, where its youth was nurtured and sustained, where it once stood, in the strength of its manhood and full of its original spirit, it made its last feeble stand a few nights ago by the side of that cradle in which its infancy was rocked, and it fell at last amid the proudest monuments of its former glory and on the very spot of its origin. [Applause.]

The Republican Party is now dead, decapitated, "blitzkrieged" by the Power Trust, the utility Fascisti, the most ruthless and the most corrupt combination of wealth and power this country has ever known. It is the greatest racket of modern times. It has gone further in its "fifth column" methods, in its violation of every law of God and man, to control legislatures, to corrupt courts, to intimidate Governors, to rule commissions, to control Congressmen, to subsidize the press, to deceive the public, to rob the users of electric energy, to plunder innocent purchasers through watered stocks, and now to "blitzkrieg" the Republican Party, than all the other debasing influences in this country combined. [Applause.] It is no longer the Republican Party; it is now the utility Fascisti. It has chosen as its standard bearer a leader of the Power Trust, the Mussolini of this utility Fascisti, who will now attempt to carry the Republican banner, formerly borne by Abraham Lincoln and William McKinley. I wonder how that is going to look to the honest, God-fearing, liberty-loving, conscientious Republicans from one end of this country to the other.

We are now informed by their new propaganda machine that this new leader who was nominated a few nights ago sprang forth upon the spur of the moment, and that the people demanded his nomination. What nonsense. About a year ago, or a little over, I made a short statement on this floor, which I ask the Clerk to read in my time, stating the date.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The CLERK. In the House of Representatives, Tuesday, May 23, 1939:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, from the press reports we learn that there is a new candidate for President on the Republican ticket, Mr. Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern, who has been referred to as the fashion plate of the Power Trust.

It is not surprising to find that the utilities now demand control of the Republican Party and that one of their moguls be selected as its candidate for the Presidency. It is a well-known rule of the game that he who pays the fiddler may call the tune.

Of course, if he is nominated, little will be said by the Republican press about his connection with the utilities.

He will probably be heralded as a friend of the farmer—the farmers' candidate.

There is one thing about it, if he should be nominated and elected, the country would then have a President who can teach the American farmers how to water the stock and shear the sheep. [Applause.]

[Applause and laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. You have got him—or he has got you. [Laughter.]

Unless the Republicans now decide to hold a convention and nominate a candidate for President, your party is gone; the G. O. P. is dead.

Where were you Republicans who have been talking about the farmers during this "blitzkrieg"? I read your platform and I am going to refer to it. I read it twice. I read the one that you wrote, and then the one that was adopted after Wall Street had it corrected. There is not a word in that platform about rural electrification, the one thing in which the farmers are most interested. [Applause on the Republican side.] I note that the Wall Street wing of the Republicans applauded that statement, because you are opposed to rural electrification; you want to destroy rural electrification, the greatest thing that has yet been done for the American farmers.

You have made the issue; we gladly accept it. The power question is the major issue in this campaign. It is the greatest domestic issue now before the American people. We accept that challenge, and we will meet you in every State in the Union, and when we get through you will probably have Maine and Vermont left, but I doubt it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Is the gentleman sure?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, you may have a part of New Jersey left, but not all of it. I am sorry I cannot yield.

These peace-loving Republicans who left here a few days ago with a platform already prepared to keep this country out of war, and to guarantee that our boys should never be sent "to shed their blood on foreign soil," went to Philadelphia and introduced that plank, and even got it adopted by the platform committee, I believe; but, lo and behold, it did not suit Wall Street; it did not suit the House of Morgan; it did not suit somebody high up in the international financial circles, and they made you change it and adopt one that says nothing and means nothing.

I notice that after that platform was adopted and the candidate was nominated, it was stated that London was highly gratified; that it meant we were going into war as soon as the election was over. I tuned in on Berlin and heard that Germany was also gratified; so I began to wonder which side of the war we were going in on. But it finally dawned on me that Wall Street controlled both broadcasters that are feeding us the echoes from New York through both London and Berlin, as well as through Paris and Rome. They want to get us into the war, even if it is lost, in order to unload their losses onto this Government, as they did before—during the Mellon regime.

My distinguished friend, Senator MCNARY, who had come back home in utter disgust, was called up and pleaded with to take the place as next ex-candidate for Vice President on the Republican ticket. He finally consented, saying, "I'll be a good soldier." Which was like saying, "Yes; I'll be a pallbearer; it is a debt we all have to pay."

They said that would balance the ticket. I wonder if that is their idea of balancing the Budget? It reminds me of the old mess sergeant in the Army who stole all the funds and then made some hash out of dead mule. He said it was half-and-half hash; half chicken and half mule, because he said he used one chicken and one mule in making it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCNARY could no more balance all the evils of the Power Trust that you are going to have to carry in this campaign than the now deceased Republican elephant could have hung to a horizontal bar by its eyebrows.

By the way, the Republican elephant died while this "blitzkrieg" was in session at Philadelphia. You know, they took the biggest elephant in America up to Philadelphia to show him off, but when he found out what was going on, as the old Negro said, "He up and died." Then they picked out one in Pittsburgh, and he took the hint and died also. But that is all right; they will not need the elephant any more. They will have to use the octopus instead of the elephant as a campaign emblem—representing the Power Trust, that sprawls over the Nation like a huge octopus, and runs its loathsome tentacles into every home that uses electricity, into every business establishment, and into every factory that uses electric power. They should turn the pictures of Lincoln, McKinley, and Borah to the wall, and replace them with the pictures of Insull, Hopson, and Willkie.

We are glad to accept the issue. You have been making it a long time, but some of you evidently thought you would get away from it when you got to Philadelphia—from the way you booed the name of Willkie. We heard you; we knew your voices. We were like the Irishman was when the horsefly got after him and he thought it was a hornet. He said, "Ah, you have changed your suit, but I know your voice." [Laughter.] You booed like everything when his name was mentioned, but when the word came down from Wall Street, "You will either take him or you will not get any campaign funds," there was a different cry; you "first endured, then pitied, then embraced."

The old-line Republicans who have fought the battles throughout all these years were discarded, kicked out. Even that great able leader from the far West, ex-President Herbert Hoover, made one of the greatest speeches ever delivered before a Republican convention; and he did not hesitate to take the hide off of us where he thought it was due. Probably we deserved some of it, not all of it. Among other things, he urged you to "hold an election and not an auction."

Poor fellow; he evidently did not know that the auction had already been held. When he found it out he went fishing. [Laughter.]

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Senator Taft, my good personal friend, Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Mr. Dewey, of New York—they were all thrown aside by this Power Trust Fascisti that had been organizing for more than a year to nominate your candidate. You have made the power question the chief issue in this campaign, and, as I said, we gladly accept it.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has done more for the power consumers of America than any other man who has ever been President of the United States, and if he will accept the nomination he will sweep the country in the November election. [Applause.]

Millions of farm homes are now electrified which would never have had electric lights even if it had not been for him. If this Willkie ticket should be elected we know what it would do. It would stop this program of rural electrification and those farms which we have not already reached would be forever left in the dark.

Do you know how this thing was done? The power interests are collecting in overcharges more than $1,000,000,000 a year from the light and power consumers, and this great Fascisti, known as the Power Trust, that is now dominating so many States in the Union, is attempting to get control of the Federal Government. The people you were sent here to represent are paying these overcharges—paying through the nose.

When you find a newspaper that is not subsidized, directly or indirectly, you will invariably find one that is now supporting the Democratic ticket and the Democratic candidates. All those telegrams that came into the convention were inspired or prepared by this outfit. It is the old trick, the same thing they did here when they were fighting the holding-company bill. They even had their hired henchmen to pack the galleries of your convention. They had people to send you telegrams who never heard of you or Willkie either one, to try to make you believe it was a spontaneous uprising; that the people were demanding this man, who, as I said, has been the front, the glamor boy, for the greatest, most powerful, and most corrupt combination of wealth and influence this Nation has ever seen.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. McGRANERY. Did the gentleman observe that in the telegrams that were sent to the delegates at the Republican convention the same grammatical errors were in each of the telegrams, covering thousands?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I understand that is true. I understand the same words were spelled wrong in a whole series of telegrams. For instance, some would spell Willkie "W-i-l-c-h-k-e," the way his father used to spell it when he first came over from Germany.

This is the first candidate ever nominated for President by either party who never had a relative in the Revolutionary War and never had one on either side in the Civil War. Without such a combination as this he never could have been nominated in a single State in the Union, much less at a national convention.

Mr. SECCOMBE. The gentleman will remind the House that this gentleman served in the World War and is an ex-service man.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right. So did Mussolini. [Applause.] They were both fighting on our side then. But I am talking about what they have done since the war.

I want to show you where the money is coming from to pay for this propaganda—and I mean this in all seriousness.

I have fought this battle of the power consumers on this floor for more than 10 years.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question only.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. If I were going to run on the Democratic ticket——

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, that would be impossible. I did not yield for such a statement.

I have no personal feeling against Mr. Willkie. I know him. But I am opposed to the things for which he stands. I am opposed to the system he represents and that forced his nomination. I am opposed to this gigantic utility fascisti that is trying to dominate the American Government and the American people, that is wringing from them in ruthless overcharges hundreds of millions, yes, a billion dollars, a year for electric lights and power.

It is the estimate of every man to whom I have talked that the campaign for this nomination cost millions of dollars. Where did that money come from? Oh, you investigated the Long machine in Louisiana. You said as "honest Republicans" you demanded it. I am not against you personally because you are Republicans. I respect your integrity when you manifest it. But if you are sincere, you should demand an investigation of that affair at Philadelphia. You should demand such an investigation just as you demanded an investigation in Louisiana, in Georgia, and in other places. Why pass the Hatch Act to close the mouth of every Federal or State employee and then turn your party and your Government over to the hirelings of this supergovernment known as the Power Trust—the utility fascisti?

Why prosecute Hopson? Why prosecute one of these holding companies for using the mails to defraud in unloading their watered stock, and let the others escape? Why persecute one and sanctify another? As I stated, the money that goes into this campaign will be wrung from the power consumers from Maine to Mexico. As Woodrow Wilson said in connection with priming the old pump—

> We always notice that the water we pour in is the first to come out.

They know this slush fund will come back and that your constituents will pay it—through the nose.

I am going to show you what the people of each State pay, how they are overcharged, and I am not going to use the T. V. A. rates for comparison. I am going to use the rates of the Tacoma, Wash., system, which has about $26,000,000 invested. It has paid that down to where it now owes only about $4,000,000.

Tacoma has the lowest electric rates in the United States. They are gradually paying out. Yet Tacoma has the highest investment for the number of people served of any public power system in the whole country. I am going to use Tacoma's rates, and I call the attention of you gentlemen from the various States to the overcharges your people are paying now. If this ticket should win, they would pay it from now on. The Commonwealth & Southern has been trying to destroy rural electrification by spite lines in the various States. Our rural electrification program, which this very outfit Mr. Willkie heads has been trying to destroy, and all its affiliates have been trying to destroy, would come to a standstill. Your farmers then might as well close the door so far as the future development of rural electrification is concerned—the greatest blessing that has ever been brought to the farmers of this Nation by any administration.

The Tacoma system pays a higher rate of taxes than is paid by the average private power company, and then makes a large cash contribution to the city.

This is not a power-producing company you are fooling with now—this Commonwealth & Southern. It is a holding company, a bleeding company, that sprawls from Michigan to Alabama. It reaches down and sucks the economic life blood out of the power consumers. It is absolutely useless, it exists in violation of the common law, and never could have existed in this country if the State of New Jersey had not broken over in 1889 and legalized them after they had been condemned by the British courts for a thousand years. Under the common law one corporation cannot hold stock in another. The President said of them in 1932 that they were useless holding companies whose officials raise their high salaries higher, which he branded as a form of "thievery within the law."

All the money to sustain them comes out of the masses of the American people, those who use electricity. Let us see how much this amounts to, let us see where it comes from, and, as I stated, I am comparing these rates with the Tacoma rates which we are trying to put into effect at Bonneville and Grand Coulee on the Columbia River.

ILLINOIS

Let us take first the State of Illinois. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], I understand, is going to speak later today and I just wonder if he would mind explaining to the people of Illinois why it is that according to these Tacoma rates his people were overcharged $85,480,273 for their electric lights and power in the year 1938? In 1939 it was just as bad. What does this mean? They have reached down into the pockets of every man who turns an electric switch in Illinois. The laborer who plods his weary way home at night, seeking a bath, a change of clothes, so that he may spend the evening with his family in peace and quiet, is denied the use of those appliances that go to make his home comfortable and attractive, in order that the money may go to maintain this supergovernment that is today controlling a majority of the States of this Union directly or indirectly, and has now taken over what was left of the Republican Party.

There is also the little merchant down on the corner, struggling for a living, who already pays more kinds of taxes than almost any other man alive. He is robbed of more than 100 percent in overcharges every time he pays an electric bill in order that it may go to sustain this great supergovernment. I will put the rates in for every community in the State of Illinois later. They can generate power in Illinois with Illinois coal and distribute it without loss to the power consumers of that great State at the T. V. A. rates, or at the Tacoma rates, and make an adequate return on legitimate investments. Illinois is one of the States in which Mr. Willkie's Commonwealth & Southern operates.

PENNSYLVANIA

Let us turn to Pennsylvania, where this thing was perpetrated. We find that although Pennsylvania is rich in water power, although Pennsylvania is rich in coal, although Pennsylvania is rich in oil, although waterpower is being sold wholesale by one private company to another in Pennsylvania at cheaper rates than it is being sold wholesale in the Tennessee Valley, yet the people in Pennsylvania, according to these Tacoma rates, where they have such an enormous investment, were overcharged $105,004,244 for electric lights and power in 1938. Every man who turns a switch, every little industry, every merchant in Pennsylvania has it to pay.

MINNESOTA

I heard the voice of the Governor of Minnesota, and as I listened to him there came ringing down through the centuries the words of the greatest philosopher of all time:

> But man, proud man,
> Drest in a little brief authority,
> Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
> His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
> As make the angels weep.

He was describing the Governor of Minnesota in advance.

Let us see what is happening to Minnesota. In the State of Minnesota—I do not want to get you mixed up with Michigan, because Michigan is worse, if possible, than Minnesota—where you would not have had any rural power at all if it had not been for the Roosevelt administration. I wish you could read the mail I get from the farmers in Minnesota. The people of Minnesota were overcharged for electric lights and power, according to the Tacoma rates, where, as I said, they have the greatest investment for the amount of power produced of any public power system in America, the people of Minnesota, in 1938, paid tribute in the amount of $20,335,981 in overcharges for electric lights and power. That is even taking it from the farmers, because we Democrats have electrified thousands of farm homes in that State. If you had nominated a good Republican—I mean a good Republican—and he had been elected, he would probably have gone along with us, but they shut the door in your faces.

WISCONSIN

Let me say to my smiling genial friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] with whom we all commiserate, that in Wisconsin, where we have also built thousands of miles of rural power lines reaching those farmers out there without your help, you men on the Republican side before this "blitzkrieg" have opposed rural electrification, as a rule.

Mr. PITTENGER. Oh, no.

Mr. RANKIN. There are a few of you—possibly a dozen, who have gone along with us. I hope to find time to complete a volume which I have been writing to show the American people what electricity is worth, what it should cost them. I had hoped to make it short enough for them to read it, and write it in terms they can understand.

The people in Wisconsin in 1938 were overcharged $26,144,710.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on Wisconsin?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The 1938 electric rates in Wisconsin were determined and regulated by the La Follette-progressive controlled Wisconsin Public Service Commission. The La Follette machine is a great cog of the New Deal political machine, so do not blame Willkie or the Republican Party, but blame your New Deal progressive division in Wisconsin if the people of Wisconsin have been overcharged. I believe the gentleman's figures are incorrect.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman, because if it had not been for that it would probably have been $40,000,000. [Laughter.]

MICHIGAN

Now, let us see about Michigan. Wisconsin and Michigan are right close together. Let us see what the people of Michigan are overcharged. In 1938 the people of the State of Michigan were overcharged for electric lights and power $49,415,023. I do not suppose LA FOLLETTE did that, did he?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman put into that book the fact that the Michigan residents pay in $263 per capita and Mississippi $12 per capita?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I do not want to exaggerate.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Those are Government figures.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no. I do not think you are overcharged to that extent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes, they are.

Mr. RANKIN. We are going to give you a chance to explain to the people at home. We have the radio now that reaches these victims, and we are going to lay these facts before them.

We are going to be on that radio from now on. We are going to give the American people the facts. [Applause.]

NEW YORK

Now, let us take the State of New York, and by the way, there are some things I would like to comment on, but I am afraid of my time. Let us take the State of New York where, with all the battles we have waged in that State, in 1938 the power consumers of the State of New York were overcharged $179,861,683, and yet there is the St. Lawrence, and there is the Niagara River, and other streams in that State; and, by the way, if they had got their power in New York State at the same rates they are getting it in Ontario, which is just across the river, power half of which belongs to the people of New York—if they had got their power at those rates they would have saved $176,683,082 a year. Do you know what that means? That means that the poor people in the State of New York, as in your States, are denied the use of enough electricity to really enjoy it.

I am trying to save you. You cannot hurt me. I know it is the threat of Wendell Willkie's crowd that they will destroy the T. V. A. They do not stand any more chance of destroying the T. V. A. as long as civilized America lasts, than Gov. Bob Taylor's gutta-percha dog did to catch an asbestos cat in hades. [Laughter and applause.]

We are getting our power today at what it is worth, while the people in your States are not. They are the ones who are paying these tremendous overcharges. For the first time, millions of farmers in this country are getting power with which to light their homes and to pump their water and to use their refrigerators, a luxury they never knew before and never would have known, at least during this generation, if it had not been for this administration; also vacuum cleaners, washing machines, and electric irons to lift from the shoulders of the housewives the tremendous burdens of drudgery under which they have struggled since the beginning of time, and this applies to the womenfolks of the toiling families in the congested cities just the same as it does on the farms.

MASSACHUSETTS

But let us take some more of these States. Let us come down to Massachusetts. Oh, I heard the voice of Massachusetts, with that old New England brogue, holler "Willkie" [laughter]; and I turned to the record and looked, and I found that the people in Massachusetts, a great State, one of the Original Thirteen States, were overcharged in 1938, $51,278,061, and I wondered if they knew.

What they hope to do is to subsidize the press and monopolize the radio and keep us from telling the American people the truth about what electricity is worth and how much they are being overcharged and what can be done to supply it to them at reasonable rates. But let us move out into the great tribute."

OHIO

Suppose we take Indiana. We find that out there in that great State of Indiana, where they are clamoring for rural electrification, where they are clamoring for cheaper electric rates, in 1938 they were overcharged $30,325,918. Have you seen the market today? That is the price of 40,000,000 bushels of wheat on today's market. That is the price of 50,000,000 bushels of corn on today's market. The people of Indiana are called upon to pay tribute, for which they get nothing in return, that amounts to hauling in 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, or 50,000,000 bushels of corn, piling it up in Indianapolis, and saying to the utilities, "Here is our annual Middle West.

INDIANA

Let us go a little further and take Ohio. Ah, some fellow from Ohio, one of our good friends, for whom I have great admiration, said the other day that Cincinnati had very cheap rates. Why? Because we were threatening to build a T. V. A. power line across the State of Ohio to supply the farmers of that State, and the people in Cincinnati were demanding to be hooked on, and for that reason the power company that serves Cincinnati reduced its rates to less than half of what they are charging in nearby towns.

We are publishing a rate book now which gives the rates in every community in America, and I am not guessing at this, because I have checked it within the last 3 days.

Let us see what Ohio is paying in overcharges. In 1938 the people of the State of Ohio paid in overcharges for electric lights and power $63,968,130. Sixty-three million dollars. The price of 100,000,000 bushels of corn, the price of 80,000,000 bushels of wheat—twice as much wheat as Ohio makes. I am trying to bring this home to you because I do not believe that you gentlemen realize what a stupendous robbery of the unprotected power consumers of America is now taking place.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Cincinnati. Is not that the home of their favorite son, whom the Republican Party repudiated the other day at Philadelphia?

Mr. RANKIN. You refer to Senator TAFT. No; the Republican Party is still with him, but the "blitzkrieg" got him. [Laughter.]

NEW JERSEY

Take the State of New Jersey. In New Jersey they were overcharged, in 1938, $55,574,610.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman also put in that book of his the overcharge by the most corrupt, inefficient, and un-American national administration that we have ever had——

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; he is not going to be elected—Mr. Willkie will never be elected—and that is unnecessary. And another thing, I am not going back to attack the Harding administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PATRICK. To ask the gentleman if last year, when we all thought it was fantastic, if he did not on this floor state that Wendell Willkie was then seeking nomination for President?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; I read that into the RECORD today.

CONNECTICUT

Let us now take up the small State of Connecticut. In 1938 the people of Connecticut were overcharged $22,494,401. It is no wonder your industries are moving away—no wonder they are going to some places where they can get cheaper power.

IOWA

Let us take Iowa. Iowa ought to be one of the richest States in this Union, because it has about the richest land. The people of Iowa are clamoring for rural electrification. Last year they were overcharged $17,446,385, or the value of 30,000,000 bushels of corn, their greatest crop.

KANSAS

The people of Kansas were overcharged $13,209,420 for electricity in 1938. Do you think they want to continue to pay that tribute for all time?

KENTUCKY

The people of Kentucky were overcharged in 1938, according to these Tacoma rates, $11,520,461. Remember, the Tacoma plant paid more taxes, according to the power sold, than do the private power companies throughout the Nation.

Power can be produced in Kentucky with Kentucky coal, or Kentucky water power, and distributed at the Tacoma rates, without loss on legitimate investments.

LOUISIANA

The people of Louisiana were overcharged $7,818,538 in 1938. The same power company that wrings these enormous overcharges from the helpless consumers in Louisiana generates electricity with Louisiana gas, transmits it up into Arkansas, and sells it wholesale at 2.2 mills a kilowatt-hour. It could be distributed all over Louisiana at the T. V. A. rates, or at the Tacoma rates, without loss to legitimate investors.

MISSOURI

The people of Missouri paid overcharges for electric light and power in 1938 amounting to $26,520,299. The farmers in Missouri are begging for electricity. Although more of them are getting power as a result of rural electrification than ever before, there are still thousands who are getting none at all.

What does it all mean? It means that the American people are in bondage to the Power Trust, this huge octopus, this huge organization that dominated the other night in the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency, an organization that reaches out and takes from the American people, the helpless people of America, a dividend of a billion dollars a year in overcharges.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that the rate-making authorities that establish the rates the gentleman contends represent overcharges are in the hands of public-utility commissions in practically all of these States?

Mr. RANKIN. And, as a rule, those State commissions are dominated by this same fascisti. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has referred to the State of New York, which has been in the hands, first, of Alfred E. Smith, as Governor, then of Franklin D. Roosevelt, as Governor, and now of Herbert Lehman, as Governor—three Democratic administrations. Does the gentleman contend that the utility commissioners appointed by those Governors are also controlled by the Power Trust?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman can make it four Democratic administrations, because we will elect another one this year, and then when we get a Democratic Congress that will go with us we will develop the St. Lawrence and also establish an authority on the Niagara River that will protect the people of New York from these overcharges.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman does not contend we have not had a Democratic Congress since 1933, does he?

Mr. RANKIN. No; but I contend that we will have another one next year; probably a bigger majority than we have now. I like you gentlemen personally, and this applies especially to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin who just addressed me. I have said that the Republican Party in all its history had not sent a better crowd of young men to Congress than the ones who came in 2 years ago. You have ability; you have stamina; but you have muffed this one question, the power issue, and now you find yourselves with this anvil tied about your necks. You are not responsible for it; you did not nominate this candidate. My friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] did not nominate him, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has read some of the papers.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I knew in advance.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, MAINE, AND VERMONT

Now let us take some of these other States. Here is New Hampshire, one of the smallest States in the Union, overcharged $5,517,000; Maine overcharged $7,708,538; Vermont overcharged $3,622,074. Those States have natural waterpower. It is the only natural resource they have outside of the soil. New England has no coal; it has no oil; it has very little wood. This waterpower is about all you have left; yet this very outfit that today is trying to dominate America is robbing the people of New England of this great natural resource and denying it to the people of those States.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman tell us the overcharge in the State of Mississippi, if any?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; the overcharges for 1938 in Mississippi amounted to $5,682,532, according to the Tacoma rates.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman for that. Will the gentleman please answer this question—he did not answer my other one.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to finish this.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman please answer this: Can the gentleman tell us what he can do down in Mississippi any more than can be done in New York and all these other States to reduce that overcharge, and what is the gentleman doing to take care of his constituents in Mississippi?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I have taken care of the situation in my own district, but there are sections of the State that are less fortunate. This year the overcharges in my district will be entirely eliminated, saving the people of the district approximately $2,000,000. But the Commonwealth & Southern, which is running Mr. Willkie for President on this new ticket, owns the power facilities in the southeastern portion of Mississippi, where they charge outrageously high rates for their electricity.

We buy it wholesale, where I live, for 5 mills and distribute it at the standard T. V. A. yardstick rates. The Mississippi Power Co. buys it from another power company at 4.1 mills, but when they get through delivering it to the ultimate consumer they overcharge them about 100 percent or a little more.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman mean to say that the power company owns the Democratic Party in the State of Mississippi, in the State of New York, and in all of these other States, where they have had Democratic administrations under able leadership, and have stopped the possibility of cutting these overcharges?

Mr. RANKIN. No; the Power Trust does not own the Democratic Party in Mississippi. With their power to control the press, with the money they spend around these legislatures and around these local utility commissions, the only way we have ever found to combat them was through some form of public ownership that they cannot stick their fingers into. The only people in the State of Wisconsin, for instance, who are getting electricity at anything like what it is worth are in those municipalities which own their own plants and which Wendell Willkie cannot touch. [Applause.]

Our only hope for relief down there was the Tennessee River. When we came into power in 1933, this very Commonwealth & Southern was buying power from your party, from your administration at Muscle Shoals, at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour and selling it in sight of the dam at 10 cents per kilowatt-hour, or a spread of about 5,000 percent. Our municipalities now buy it at about 5 to 7 mills—from two and one-half to three and one-half times as much as the power company was paying then. But, instead of selling it to the consumers at a maximum of 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, they sell it at a maximum of 3 cents a kilowatt-hour and scale down to a minimum of 4 mills a kilowatt-hour, and at the same time the T. V. A. is paying for itself; we are paying for our power, and our distribution systems are paying their way out.

OTHER STATES

The overcharges in the State of Alabama in the year 1938, according to the Tacoma rates, were $10,386,684; in Arizona, $5,088,034; Arkansas, $6,906,584; California, $56,942,132—and if it had not been for the reduction of rates in California, brought about by the example set by the municipal system in Los Angeles, which gets its power from Boulder Dam, the overcharges in that State would amount to more than $100,000,000 a year.

In Colorado these overcharges in 1938 amounted to $10,257,341; Delaware, $2,464,079; Florida, $17,474,288; Georgia, $14,218,978; Idaho, $4,547,572; Maryland, $16,608,569; Montana, $6,123,079; Nebraska, $8,696,182; Nevada, $1,221,231; New Mexico, $2,362,775; North Carolina, $16,484,940; North Dakota, $3,044,298; Oklahoma, $15,464,689; Oregon, $9,107,187; Rhode Island, $9,710,671; South Carolina, $8,175,060; South Dakota, $3,729,167; Texas, $42,230,204; Utah, $6,100,458; Virginia, $14,239,162; Washington, $14,273,945; West Virginia, $13,548,099; Wyoming, $2,362,961.

Remember, that since the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the beginning of this administration's power program, we have forced reductions in light and power rates to the ultimate consumers throughout this country amounting to more than $600,000,000 a year. And yet, according to these Tacoma rates, which is perhaps the best example to be found in the United States of what electricity is really worth, the American people paid overcharges in 1938 amounting to $1,130,300,000.

Our object is to continue these reductions to the 27,000,000 ultimate consumers of electricity in this country until we wipe those overcharges out. If the opposition should succeed, their object would be to wipe out the reductions we have already made, kill our rural electrification program, turn the water power of this Nation over to selfish interests, and forever shut the door of hope in the faces of the American people so far as justice in electric light and power rates are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to close. I feel very keenly on this subject. I have struggled here for more than 10 years to try to bring justice to the ultimate consumers of electricity in every State in the Union, and to take the blessings of rural electrification to the farmers in every community in America. In my own district I have succeeded, but I will never be satisfied until we succeed in every city, every town, and every rural community throughout this broad land.

I want to repeat that this is the outstanding domestic issue in the coming campaign. I said at the Chicago convention in 1932 that this power question would be the greatest issue before the American people for the next 25 years. Eight years have gone by. It is not only the paramount issue, but it has brought forth a new party and a new candidate for President.

If we are going to restore peace and prosperity to the American people, we must restore to them justice and stop this plundering of them through alleged legitimate means. The time has come when America is going to be looked to again for leadership among the nations of the earth. The peoples of the rest of the world are looking to us now, but we cannot assume that leadership, that moral and spiritual leadership for which the world is praying, if we tolerate corruption of this kind.

We must stamp it out. Let us say to all the American people and to the rest of the world: We are going to give our people the benefit of their great natural resources; we are going to make America a better, a brighter, a more decent, a more attractive, and a more prosperous place in which to live. We are going to restore moral and spiritual values in America, that our country may go down to the future holding high the torch and making light the way up which all other nations of the earth may follow into a new era of peace, happiness, progress, and prosperity for all mankind. [Applause, the Members rising.]

During the delivery of Mr. RANKINS' speech,

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is a constitutional question at all times. Does the gentleman from New Jersey insist upon his point of order?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 265 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

CONGRESS SHOULD STAY IN SESSION AND KEEP AT WORK

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, since the crisis developed in the European war I have been one of those of the House who has advocated that the Congress remain in session until the emergency is over. I feel that the present situation is such that under no circumstances should the Congress now adjourn. It is conceded by everyone in and out of Congress that national defense is a paramount consideration. We find that we are wholly unprepared to engage in a military conflict, even here on our own shores. While we have a Navy that is modern and effective, it is not of sufficient strength to defend our own country and our possessions in both oceans and maintain the Monroe Doctrine against a combination of foreign nations which now is in the process of formation. The Congress is taking steps to remedy this defect. We have authorized and provided appropriations for the expansion of the Navy, air force and military forces that will be sufficient to defend this country against all comers. It will take, however, several years to carry into effect these authorizations. In the meantime, much legislation will be required and much detail work made necessary in order to insure that these immense sums appropriated shall be judiciously expended in carrying forward the objectives for which the funds were appropriated. The Congress cannot provide the legislation for the authorizations and appropriations, adjourn and go home without being derelict in its duty. It must be remembered that the Constitution of the United States vests in the Congress the authority to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a Navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to provide for organizing the Army and disciplining the militia, to levy taxes, and to appropriate money and to make all laws which shall be necesssary and proper for carrying into execution these powers. The Congress is vested with the sole power for providing for the national defense. It should, therefore, stay on the job and make sure that the national defense, which is so lacking at the present time, is restored to that point of efficiency that we may successfully defend ourselves against any attack from any source.

It would be, however, an ill-advised course of procedure for the Congress technically to remain in session and recess from time to time and fail to devote itself to a solution of the many problems confronting it. If we remain in session we should remain at work, as there is an immense amount of work to do which only the Congress can perform. First of all, we have many legislative problems having directly to do with the national defense which may be profitably considered at this time. In addition, we have numerous domestic problems which the Seventy-sixth Congress has failed to solve and which it should solve before adjourning. These can now be considered while Congress is in session. Among these may be mentioned the tax problem. The President has just submitted to the Congress a recommendation that a tax measure be enacted having for its purpose the capturing of excess war profits. I am strongly of the opinion that this suggested recommendation is sound. We should not enact a program that will call into service the manpower of our country and at the same time permit those who remain out of the service to amass large profits from national-defense activities. There should be no new group of war millionaires come out of our defense program. Furthermore, the whole tax structure should be revamped to place it on a sound, scientific basis, broadening the base, reaching sources of revenue now untouched, and providing sufficient revenues which eventually will restore the country to a pay-as-you-go basis. True, this cannot be accomplished entirely at the present time, but a scientific, broad, far-reaching program may be inaugurated which will eventually bring about a balanced budget.

Also, other legislation which has been partially considered but not completed, may now profitably be considered. The amendments to the Hatch Act should be enacted into law before Congress adjourns. The newly nominated Republican candidate for the Presidency has signified his approval of this act and the administration which controls the legislative program of the Congress should see to it that this much-needed legislation is passed and approved by the President without further delay.

Amendments to the National Labor Relations Act are pending in the Senate. The Walter-Logan bill should be considered. We still have 10,000,000 unemployed. Aside from national-defense legislation, which will absorb some of these workmen in skilled labor, no other legislation has been enacted which offers relief. The Social Security Act as now administered has proven ineffective to accomplish its purpose. Large groups of our old people who are in want and should be taken care of in the social-security program are without relief. The taxing feature has not worked satisfactorily and the whole program needs revamping. These are only a few of the many matters of legislation to which the Congress could devote itself at this time.

As a part of my remarks I ask permission to include a poll recently taken by Edward J. Wall, director, American Opinion Forecasts, Inc., which shows that the Nation as a whole is in favor of Congress remaining in session during the emergency and devoting itself to the solution of these problems which now confront us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The poll is as follows:

(By Edward J. Wall, director, American Opinion Forecasts, Inc.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.—If a vote were taken today throughout the United States on whether Congress should adjourn or remain in session, the result would be more one-sided than any other vote ever recorded by our people. Eighty-five out of every one hundred men and women voters would say to Congress, "Stay in Washington!"

A poll just taken throughout the country shows an overwhelming demand from every section of this country that Congress remain in session. The question asked was, "Do you want Congress to stay right on the job in Washington because of present world conditions, or do you want Congress to adjourn as soon as possible, leaving everything to the President?" The emphatic answer—84.8 percent of men and women voters say "Stay on the job"; 15.2 percent of voters would say "Adjourn."

The figures are important not only because of what they express but also because the vote was taken while this question is being fought out in Washington, and the comments from those interviewed proved beyond all doubt the country is determined to keep Congress right in Washington. This table shows it:

	Men	Women	Total
	Percent	Percent	Percent
Stay on job	84.6	85	84.8
Adjourn	15.4	15	15.2
Total	100.0	100	100.0

Women and men would vote almost alike on this question; in fact the survey shows only one important difference and that is in the number of women expressing no opinion, approximately 10 out of every 100, while only 5½ men out of every 100 had no opinion. But among those men and women expressing their opinions there was a startling unanimity, a difference of less than 1 percent.

It is also interesting to note that the poll itself divides the country roughly into three sections, showing a marked difference of opinion. Dividing the country into these sections, this is the result:

	Stay	Adjourn
	Percent	Percent
North Central and New England States	87.7	12.3
Pacific and Mountain States	85.6	14.4
Southern States	79.3	20.7

While the South is about 4 to 1 against adjournment, there is a noticeable tendency there to leave the decision to the President.

If Congress follows the wishes of the people, it will stay right in Washington and in session. The present temper of the American people will approve no breathing spell and certainly no adjournment. A typical expression was "We need them now or never." Those favoring adjournment often volunteered that they wanted everything left to the President. This sentiment was particularly noted in the South, where nearly 21 percent of those voting were in favor of adjournment.

Except in the South, there was a striking unanimity of opinion as the following table, which includes the South, will show:

	Cities over 1,500,000	1,500,000 to 100,000	100,000 to 25,000	25,000 to 2,500	Under 2,500	Farms	Total
Stay on job	86.8	83.2	82.6	85.0	85.1	86.1	84.8
Adjourn	13.2	16.8	17.4	15.0	14.9	13.9	15.2

A critical analysis of the reports from which these figures are compiled discloses only one more significant fact, namely, that among women on the farm 1 in 8 have no opinion, while women throughout the country, excluding the farms, show 1 in 12, and among all men throughout the country only 1 in 20 have no opinion.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, Congress should not only remain in session during this emergency but it should devote itself to the job of saving America by solving our domestic problems as well as providing for national defense. The power to do this rests with the Congress alone. This is not a one-man government. All power over legislation is vested in the Congress by the Constitution. The Congress cannot delegate it. The people of America want the Congress to perform the duties vested in it. Only in totalitarian states can the executive assume these powers. We, the Members of Congress, are elected by the people of America to do this job. We cannot shirk our responsibility by adjourning and going home. There would then be only one elected official here to carry on. With Congress in session and at work we will be in a position to see that America is not only adequately armed for defense but that we may not be eased into war through the back door. [Applause.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended to 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the other special orders for the day I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I love the gentleman from Mississippi. He has had a tremendous influence upon the affairs of this country, and he begets the respect, the devotion, and the esteem of every Member of this House on both sides. That esteem and devotion, however, are not proof against the fact that so often he is misguided and misdirected. I listen to him with genuine interest and frequently there occurs to me the story of the old lady who left a very lucrative place to take employment elsewhere. After 2 weeks she came back to her previous employer. Her former employer said: "What's the matter Mandy? Didn't you like your new place?" That new place, of course, where they did not feed so well but where there was lots of formality. Mandy said: "No, Missy, ah don't. They's too much shufflin' of dishes for the fewness of the victuals." And you know there is fewness of the victuals oftimes in what our good friend from Mississippi says.

I am rather amazed at the trepidation that he evidences today. I see for the first time, I think, since 1933, a resurgence of the faith on our side. I see shining countenances, and I see an evidence of confidence as we march like zealous crusaders in the direction of November 5, 1940. I see over on the Democratic side some long faces. I see that some of that old-time bravado and confidence have fallen away like rain slipping from the hillsides. I wonder why? I think of the language of the Scripture where are recorded these words: "Why are ye so fearful, O ye of little faith?" As we move in the direction of November I see an air of martyrdom over here. It recalls an old chromo picture that used to hang on the walls of the bedroom in a very humble home where I was born in the little town of Pekin, Ill. It showed the last Christian martyrs. It showed those old men with white beards and white robes supplicating divine Providence as the lions were trooping from their cells. As I recall the sentiment inscribed under that chromo it was: "Moratori salutamus"—meaning "We who are about to die, salute you." [Laughter.]

As we approach November 5, 1940, why all this fear? Why all the jitters today, all over one man by the name of Wendell Lewis Willkie, who was born humbly in the town of Elwood, Ind., 48 years ago? See what frantic scrambling there is today everywhere in the ranks of our beloved friends on this side of the aisle? When I see it I think of the difficulty they are experiencing in the War Department right now. Herebefore when they had something urgent they marked it "Rush," but finally great indifference set in upon the personnel. Later on they used the word "Expedite," and after that became a familiar term they had to find something else.

Later they put on the word "Urgent," and now I understand in the War Department they are using the word "Frantic" on a little slip that is attached to stationery and letters when they want expeditious action. So we see something of that frantic quality here today as we stand in the shadow of a great convention which was held over at Philadelphia.

Let me address myself for a moment to my genial and revered friend from Mississippi, because there recurs to me today the incidents of the 13th of June 1939. That is just a year ago. In fact, that day is significant, because Wendell Willkie was nominated just exactly 1 year and 2 weeks from that date.

But on that day, June 13, 1939, there was being considered a bill on the floor of this House which enlarged the authority of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and carried with it an appropriation of approximately $76,000,000. For what purpose? To pay Commonwealth & Southern at a discount for its securities because of the fact that the United States Government put the Commonwealth & Southern security holders either out of business or in despair of the last remnant of value that those securities possessed. Yes; $76,000,000 for Commonwealth & Southern.

We were fighting the bill over on our side, standing up like crusaders going down the avenue of consistency, even as we had done since 1933 when I first opposed the Tennessee Valley Authority, and even as I oppose it today.

But who was standing in the Well appealing for Wendell Willkie? My friend from Mississippi. [Applause.] Who was standing in the Well appealing for Wendell Willkie? Our friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]. Who was standing up here appealing for the approval of an agreement? Why, none other, as I remember, than the majority leader, who said:

> This is nothing more than an agreement openly arrived at between Mr. Willkie and the authorities of Tennessee Valley Authority, and it should be approved.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that I was not pleading for Wendell Willkie. I was pleading for him to get his hands off the necks of the people of Alabama, Mississippi, and other States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, that is rather thin, I would say, because I was in attendance at the session on that day, and it looked so much like an appeal for the handiwork of the man who is now the crusader and the standard bearer of the Republican Party.

Having opposed him before, I for one am going to help hold up his hands by effort and prayer as he marches down the Avenue to victory on the 5th of November 1940. [Applause.]

Yes; what a singular thing it is! What great consternation and despair this man has suddenly occasioned, this man whose physical and mental magnetism somehow dissolves and melts the chilliness of despair and the frostiness of defeatism that has engulfed the country ever since the New Deal got started in 1933.

You say he is the product of a "blitzkrieg." Well, it is our "blitzkrieg" anyway. And when you mention fascism in connection with "blitzkrieg," and seek to put Wendell Willkie in that light, you mention also that we ought to investigate the Republican convention and see how it happened. Well, if it is not an evidence of fascism when a minority party convention must be investigated to see how we nominated our candidate, then I do not know the meaning of the term, and God save the country when that happens in the United States of America.

Do not put the brand of fascism or Hitlerism on Wendell Willkie. No. If there is to be any dirty work with the tarred stick, we could, in all humility, lift our eyes and look down in the direction of the other end of the Avenue and recite the names of hundreds who belong to the League of Peace and Freedom or the League for Freedom and Democracy, who have been identified with Trojan threats and communistic activities.

If there is any stone throwing to be done, we can do our share. I will take my stand with Willkie, whose only sin has been success through diligence and hard work, as against any subversive philosophy that bids fair to destroy all the things that we hold dear in this country today. He is American to the core.

But is it not amazing that a nomination of one humble citizen in Philadelphia, who used to earn a few bucks waiting on tables and drying dishes in the kitchens of restaurants in South Dakota, who worked in the harvest fields of Kansas, and who bummed from one place to another for a humble job, a man who was an artillery officer in the World War, in which he served actively on the front, should start all this row?

How strange that he should suddenly disturb the complacency of the New Deal Democratic waters from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Dominion to the Gulf? A "blitzkrieg"? Maybe so, but it is our "blitzkrieg." He is our leader, and we propose to stand behind him foursquare as we move to restore the confidence and faith to the American people. That is what is annoying you today. As one talks to chambermaids, taxi drivers, housewives, and men who work with their hands, professional men, and men who till the soil everywhere, they have been saying, "We would like to have this guy Willkie." That is really what disturbs you, and that is going to be the issue in 1940, and not this tripe about the Power Trust.

Now, Uncle John has been telling us about the rates and the Power Trust gage, and he measures them, of course, against a fictitious yardstick that has been contrived down in the Tennessee Valley Authority where about 30 percent of the $505,000,000 cost of that public project will be allocated to power and the rest of it to navigation and flood control.

It is that kind of business that has catapulted Wendell Willkie into the thinking and into the conscience of the American people, because nobody pursuing private endeavor in this country can hold fast and stand up against that kind of governmental competition that is based upon a fictitious kind of formula, where about 70 percent of the invested value is first rubbed out, and then they take the remainder as a predicate upon which to found their rates. That is why Wendell Willkie was before the Committee on Military Affairs and that is why he said to them, "Gentlemen, I am a trustee. I am a trustee for hundreds of thousands of people and for over $1,500,000,000 of investment." That is why he had to plead his cause before that committee and ask to be bought out because he saw this juggernaut of government go along and crush every security holder for whom he was a trustee and whose modest investment he sought to protect against the Federal "blitzkrieg."

Yes, my friend from Mississippi, that is going to be the issue, not this fictitious issue of the so-called Power Trust. "Power Trust and Wall Street!" That is the cry. Well, drop over here to the House Library right in the corner of this Chamber and get a copy of Who's Who for 1929 and look up Franklin Delano Roosevelt. There you will find that at that time he was practicing law with Basil O'Connor, brother of our beloved one-time leader in this House, and there you will find that the firm of O'Connor & Roosevelt was doing business at 52 Wall Street. Yes; do not hang that onto Mr. Willkie, because we have the answer when that time comes. Moreover, that sort of demogogy is but a petty way to demean a great citizen.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Was the Roosevelt commercial venture as successful as the Willkie one?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to allude for a moment now to what was said in the United States Senate by the distinguished Senator from Florida, who said, "Oh, if Mr. Willkie was for national defense, why did he not get behind T. V. A., which was an instrumentality of national defense? Why was he not pushing it away back in January of 1933, since he became president of Commonwealth & Southern?

Let us take a look at that smoke screen. Once upon a time they had a Senator in the United States Senate by the name of Chamberlain. He was a Democrat, and he was chairman of an investigating committee after the war that looked into all these defense properties to see what they had done down in the T. V. A. His report is right here, and I want to spike right here and now the things the genial Senator from Florida had to say regarding the effectiveness of this whole T. V. A. monstrosity with respect to national defense. Here it is:

> We built a power plant at Nitro, W. Va., for $70,000,000; a plant at Nashville, Tenn., for $90,000,000, and nitrate plants at Sheffield, Ala.; Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Toledo, Ohio; Perryville, Md.; and Cincinnati, Ohio, costing $116,000,000, and all of these produced not one pound of powder or nitrates for use in the war. After the war these plants were sold for a salvage value which was a crime against the American taxpayer.

That is the kind of a defense program they had at that time. Millions of dollars' worth of plants that never manufactured a dime's worth of powder despite that huge American investment. Then when we came along in 1933, out of the things that were left they wrote down from $65,000,000, as I recall, to $21,000,000 what remnants of value were there.

On that basis they started with another $505,000,000 to crush out the American people who had invested in the enterprises down there. This is the thing that the soul and the courage of Wendell Willkie rebels against and for which he will bring courage and confidence and resolution to the American people as we walk down the corridor of victory from here on out, and we restore America to the true American way of life. [Applause.]

Something has been said about his transfer of party allegiance. Mr. Speaker, day after tomorrow we will observe the birthday of this Republic. On the 4th of July 1776, redoubtable and pioneer souls gathered in Philadelphia and there, with a price on their heads, they affixed their signatures to a document called the Declaration of Independence. How happy and how felicitous it is that Wendell Willkie should be the nominee in that selfsame town 164 years later. When you go back and examine the Declaration of Independence, do not overlook those lines which speak of governments being instituted among men for control and to govern them properly, and that they are not changed for light and transient causes. Then they said that there comes a whole train of abuses by the king which makes it necessary to sever with the existing order and to set up an independent government. Those intrepid souls determined that a change was needed. The existing order of things must be changed. That Declaration of Independence is signed by Robert Morris, after whom was named the very hotel where the Illinois delegation had its headquarters during the convention.

It was signed by Benjamin Franklin. At the Ben Franklin Hotel, Gannett, Taft, and Willkie had their headquarters. It was signed by that stormy petrel, Samuel Adams. It was signed by a great many dissatisfied pioneers with resolute hearts, who said, "Obviously this thing is wrong. It has taxed our patience so far that now we must rebel and restore the faith of the fathers to this country and sever our ties with the king. We must build anew."

Now 164 years later comes Wendell Willkie. I heard him in the Press Club, when some cynical person hurled the words down from the mezzanine, "Why did you leave the Democratic Party?" He said, "I did not; they left me." [Applause.] Yes; that is the answer. Like the early patriots of Philadelphia who broke with tradition to bring freedom and a new Republic, so Wendell Willkie departs from the rigidities of tradition to bring a new faith, a new hope, and a new courage to the American scene.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my distinguished friend from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. While the gentleman is shedding so much light here, will the gentleman, in the light of the appointment of Stimson and Knox, concede that Wendell Willkie, whether the party left him or not, is a better Republican today than he is a Democrat?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Who—Wendell Willkie?

Mr. PATRICK. Would not the gentleman say that he is a better Republican than he is a Democrat?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, to my good friend from Alabama, with whom I have been out on the hustings, let me say that he is a great two-fisted American and that is enough for me. [Applause.]

Mr. PATRICK. Unfortunately, that is not the question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. When he is a great American he can fit anywhere.

Mr. PATRICK. I release the gentleman from the question.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my good friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. My distinguished friend from Illinois has said that the faces of the Democrats here express anxiety and consternation. I suppose their faces, like my own, do express some sort of surprise, and regardless of party lines, we Democrats have a deep affection for you decent Republicans on that side, and when 100 of the decent Republican Congressmen signed a round robin to stop Willkie, why this change? Are we going to hear from them who signed the petition? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to my friend——

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield, but I can answer. I will let my friend answer, although I have the answer too.

Mr. DITTER. I was about to make the observation that the information that my friend has here, like much of the information that he gives to the House from time to time, is neither factual nor real. It is one of those hypotheses of the imagination upon which my friend here delights to found many of the observations that he usually makes.

Mr. McGRANERY. But my friend knows that we must rely on the press and the radio, and it was announced on the radio and written up in the press, and I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] will go along with me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will answer the gentleman. I know all about that petition that was gotten out and, as a matter of fact, there were only 8 names on it and not 100 [laughter], I have a copy in my office and I will be glad to bring it to you if you would like to see it. There is something garbled and fanciful about that kind of information. It is very much like much of the information that will go over the country in the course of the campaign.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further observation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. BENDER. I shall be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to yield the gentleman 5 minutes of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. COOPER]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I admonish you and may I admonish the country that there will be much of that sort of thin information during the campaign. It reminds me a great deal of a chap who signed an application for an insurance policy and among the questions asked there were the questions: "How old was your mother when she died? Of what did she die? How old was your father when he died? Of what did he die?" Unfortunately his father had been hanged and he did not like to say that in the application. So after some study he wrote: "My mother was 60 when she passed away and she died of pneumonia. My father was 55, and he came to his end while participating in a public function when the platform gave way." [Laughter.] Now, that is the kind of beautiful information and misinformation that we are going to hear about in 1940. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman will admit, however, that whether the incident I have mentioned really happened or not, the newspapers and the radio carried full accounts of Members who are now here in the House saying that 100 Members of the House of Representatives had signed this paper to stop Willkie. I have not heard from any of the Members whose names have been mentioned in the paper, and I would like for them to deny what I have said, if it is not true.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They do not have to deny anything with which they have not been charged. I saw the statement in Philadelphia.

Mr. McGRANERY. Their names were in the papers.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I know about it, and if you are now going to follow the old New Deal custom of believing everything you see in the newspapers, you should remember that old story.

Let me now say a word about the allegation that the Republican war chest will come from the Power Trust, from these "gouging rates" in all the States in the Union. I wonder why my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] did not give us the whole story about Commonwealth & Southern. Mr. Wendell Willkie has been running the show for 7 years, and what has happened? In the first place rates have been cut in half. Get up and deny that now, anyone who will.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman want to deny that statement?

Mr. PIERCE. The rates came down when the T. V. A. came in, and never before.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I suppose power consumption went up by 100 percent when the T. V. A. came in also, but the Commonwealth & Southern consumers are consuming twice as much power today as they were when Wendell Willkie took hold and reduced the rates. Let me say to my good friend from Oregon that it is because of Wendell Willkie that the humble folks of Tennessee can use electric curling irons today. It is because of him that electric toasters and electric ice boxes and electric facilities of all kinds have been brought into the most humble and obscure homes in Tennessee and elsewhere. Yes; take off your hat and salute a great American who has brought the use of electricity into the homes and to the firesides of humble people by the hundreds of thousands. Salute a great servant of the people who has steadily sought to enrich their lives by bringing to them the comforts of electricity.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that every reduction has been made since 1933, since the T. V. A.?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; since January 1933, when a good, two-fisted, red-blooded American who fairly exudes animal, physical, and mental magnetism, came up here before the committees of Congress and talked right into the teeth of Senators and Representatives and showed them that he knew what he was talking about. That is the kind of man who has the broad shoulders and the physique and the capacity to discharge honorably and well the responsibilities of the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] was talking about the number of Republicans protesting against the nomination of Mr. Willkie. Was there anything wrong about that, and can the gentleman name eight men on the Democratic side who would have the hardihood to protest against anything that the White House ordered?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Hardly so; at least not publicly and with that crescendo that could be heard.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman spoke about the fact that Wendell Willkie was a captain of artillery. He did not state that Wendell L. Willkie entered the service as a private and rose to a captaincy of artillery. His courage and ability to lead were recognized in the war. And does it not seem to the gentleman very significant that the song of the convention was a hymn, God Bless America, and it seemed to the people there and to the people listening that God would bless America and that we have faith that Wendell Willkie will lead us out of the depression and give us work and bring us peace and prosperity and plenty.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, alluding for a moment to the subject of Willkie and war, as one who soldiered for 22 months as just an ordinary shavetail in field artillery, I am willing to go along with a captain of artillery who smelled the smoke of the 75-millimeter gun. I feel reasonably sure that when the opportunity comes, he will not make a visit to Charlottesville, Va., and stand up and, as the Chief Magistrate of the Nation so recently did, talk about one people ramming a stiletto into the back of another people, thereby offending the dignity of another nation, and bring about a condition of jitters among the people of America, who even now are importuning the Congress to stay on the job for fear the Chief Magistrate would take us into war. [Applause.]

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. The gentleman is such a good-natured partisan that all of us are fond of him, and have a profound affection for him.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I am fond of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. But I think the gentleman has made an innocent and an honest error in describing the year as 1933 in which Mr. Willkie first became connected with the Commonwealth & Southern. I think he will find that it was in 1930.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think he became president or chairman of the board in January 1933.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. But he first went as an official in 1930.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But I am talking about the time when he assumed real guiding authority of Commonwealth & Southern. That was in January 1933.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I was going to ask the gentleman this, if he saw any connection with the change in the market value of the stock of the Commonwealth & Southern and that date?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend is familiar with that old picture. My friend knows what ran that stock value down. My friend knows what kind of conniving was going on behind the scenes. My friend knows the easy and effective methods employed by government to pressure those who oppose its policies.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I am simply reading the figures given by the supporters of Senator TAFT at the Republican Convention.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You do not have to go that far. You can dig it right out of the files of the House of Representatives. In all of its putrescences it stinks right here on the doorstep of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman allow me to intervene in this love feast to quote Jim Farley's sentiments?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think he ought to be quoted.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Farley has announced the real issue and he has joined Willkie. He says the issue is "What sets of forces, economic, and social, are to conduct our Government—the historic American processes"—that is the Republican way [laughter]—"or some new and somewhat foreign methods of concentrated control?" That is the New Deal way, and Jim is for the Republicans. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, may I allude once more, just so that the RECORD will be straight, to one matter. Everybody in this House knows that we have a Federal Power Commission. I have crossed sabers with those gentlemen in the Appropriations Committee many times. Do you not know they are clothed with authority to regulate wholesale rates of power as power travels across interstate lines? Now, where is my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to talk about the Power Trust and about fastening its greedy tentacles upon all State commissions? If that be true, then he must admit also that in the last 5 years it must have put its hooks into the Federal Power Commission's authority, or otherwise he must confess here and now that if there is anything wrong in that field it is due to the dereliction of an agency of government under the New Deal itself.

Yes; there is an answer for all things; and so may consternation prevail. We sympathize with our brethren over on the Democratic side. Somehow we gird up our loins with sword and buckler, and, like zealous crusaders, march into the shining sun with a resurgent faith, as we set Wendell Willkie in the White House. That will be done. His shining countenance is his own story as to whether he is a human sort of person. That warm smile is its own platform. Those searching eyes are the very epitome of courage. As he sallies forth to appear upon the rostrum from one end of the country to the other and the people partake of the magnetism and plain speech of this man without guile or equivocation, I think you can write the answer right now as to how the American people will respond on the 5th day of November 1940. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDMISTON, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks on the bill S. 134.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I will not consume the entire 10 minutes. I simply wanted to say a word or two in reply to the statements made by my good friend and neighbor the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] regarding the Republican National Convention.

As you all know, I was a delegate from Ohio, and the 52 delegates from Ohio on the first ballot, as well as the last ballot, went for Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, whom we felt was as good a man as there was running for President of the United States. We were proud to stay with him from the beginning to the end. We Ohioans believe in Senator TAFT. I do not want anything that I say to be interpreted as in any way a reflection on Senator TAFT. As a matter of fact, Senator TAFT made a good, clean fight, and Senator TAFT I hope will sometime be President of the United States. [Applause.] But being a delegate and being on the floor of that convention I can say now that I never participated in a political meeting that was as free and uncontrolled as was the Republican Convention at Philadelphia.

We Taft people went to the convention pledged. In Ohio when you run as a candidate for delegate to a convention you must pledge yourself to that candidate and you must stay with him until you are released. Until the last ballot it looked as though Mr. TAFT had a chance, and we were proud to stay with him. But I want to say this, that never in my experience did I feel a surge of sentiment for a man as I felt the surge of sentiment for the man who was finally nominated coming from people in all walks of life from my State, not big people, not big financial people, but the common folks of my community. Thousands of telegrams, letters, and post cards came in to me, asking me to vote for Wendell Willkie when and if Senator TAFT would release me as a delegate to the convention. So that all of this conversation about this convention's being controlled in any way or being an auction as was referred to is nothing but pure hokum and bunk; and gentlemen who make such statements certainly were not present on the floor of the convention to see what was happening. Those delegates voted the way they wanted to vote. They were absolutely uncontrolled. Some of the big bosses in various other parts of the country did not go for Willkie. As a matter of fact not until the final vote was cast and until it was made unanimous did some of the gentlemen who were commonly referred to as party bosses and as the old-timers come along with Mr. Willkie.

I want to make reference to the statement that a hundred Congressmen signed an appeal against Mr. Willkie. If anybody can produce a petition signed by 25 Congressmen I will give him my salary from now until the end of the session. You cannot produce such a document. In fact, I am sure the gentleman from Illinois is correct when he says that fewer than 10 persons signed such a statement.

We went to the convention with our own ideas, each of us, from our own States; and we came out with a popular candidate, a man who captured the imagination of the American people, a man for whom there was a call to defeat this man in the White House who made so many promises to us 8 years ago and who walked out on every pledge he made in his platform of 1932. The people of America wanted a leader in whom they could believe, whom they could trust. They were sick unto death of this New Deal, and you will find when the votes are counted next November that Willkie will be victorious not only in the States of the North, but he will carry many of the Southern States as well, for I have heard the conversations of many outstanding Democrats here in Washington as I discussed with them the desire of their people back home. Do you not think the people of the South are sick and tired of this thing, as they are in the North, and the West, and the East? Of course they are. Talk to them, visit with them and you will understand why it is that people are looking for leadership and looking for a man who has the courage to attack, to face the foe, and to make the kind of campaign that the hour needs and calls for.

I hope Mr. Roosevelt is a candidate for a third term. I hope the Democrats will nominate him so that he will run on his record; and I say to you that Wendell Willkie will take that record apart and show just exactly how this whole machinery has worked during the last 8 years.

In 1932 the Democratic candidate for the Presidency was Governor Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He came to the American people with a program which was to be put into effect with all possible speed to reestablish American institutions on the sound basis which they had occupied before 1929. In terms of vigorous denunciation, Candidate Roosevelt attacked Federal extravagance. He denounced the increase in our Federal bureaus. At Albany, N. Y., he told the Nation:

Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits. Let us have equal courage to reverse the policy of the Republican leaders and insist on a sound currency. Any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns. But you and I know that a continuation of that habit means the poorhouse.

With pride in his own achievements, Candidate Roosevelt pointed to his work in New York and at Buffalo, N. Y., on October 18, 1932, he asked:

How does the credit of the State of New York compare with the credit of the other 47 States of the Union?

The answer he gave should be historic in the light of events since then, for he said:

This State has the best credit and the soundest structure of government finance of any State in the Union, and I am proud that in this period of depression we have come through with the best balanced budget of any State in the Union.

Three days later at St. Louis, Mr. Roosevelt declared that:

At the very top of the credit structure of the country, surpassing all other groups in moral and material importance, stand the obligations of the Federal Government. These are paramount because government is essential to all ordered economic life. When they go, everything goes. I believe these obligations are secure. They suffer only to the extent that government is permitted to be extravagant, wasteful, or ill managed. They suffer if the Federal Budget is not balanced, and particularly where the deficit of 1 year is not cleared up in the succeeding year.

Continuing, Mr. Roosevelt declared:

I called attention, in my address at Pittsburgh on Wednesday night, to the great importance of Federal Budget making as the foundation of the national credit. I pointed out that the Hoover administration had been responsible for deficit after deficit; that as one disastrous year succeeded another, no attempt was made to arrange the finances of the country so that at least the mounting loss of revenues might not be turned into a deficit for the next year. It is my pledge and promise that this dangerous kind of financing shall be stopped and that rigid governmental economy shall be forced by a stern and unremitting administration policy of living within our income.

On March 4, 1933, in his first inaugural address, President Roosevelt turned his attention to the serious problem of unemployment. Speaking directly to the Nation of putting people to work, he declared that the task—

Can be helped by insistence that the Federal, State, and local governments act forthwith on the demand that their costs be drastically reduced.

Six days later, talking to the Congress of the United States, President Roosevelt said:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

For the fiscal year 1931, the deficit was $462,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1932, it was $2,472,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1933, it will probably exceed $1,200,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1934, based on the appropriation bills passed by the last Congress and the estimated revenues, the deficit will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 unless immediate action is taken.

With the utmost seriousness, I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed.

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

The record of performance, in the light of President Roosevelt's promises, seem almost unbelievable. The deficit for the year 1933 was more than $3,000,000,000. In 1934 it reached almost $4,000,000,000. In 1935 it amounted to $3,600,000,000. In 1936 it rose to $4,700,000,000. In 1937 it was almost $3,000,000,000. In 1938 it dropped to $1,400,000,000, but in 1939 it rocketed once more to $3,600,000,000.

The mounting public debt of the United States, which Mr. Roosevelt so bitterly decried in 1932 and 1933, moved from $19,487,976,000 in 1932 to $40,439,532,411 by 1939. If the accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000 which Mr. Roosevelt found in 1933 was a fact of the utmost seriousness, adding to the ranks of our unemployed, contributing to the collapse of our banking structure, accentuating the stagnation of the economic life of our people, what must we say of the additional deficits that have been accumulated since he took office?

The record of promise and performance on the other major issues facing us is no less significant.

On December 31, 1932, 568,345 men and women were listed in the United States Civil Service. By June 30, 1939, the figure had mounted to 929,310. Today unofficial figures indicate that the number has mounted still closer to a million.

A series of alphabetical agencies, constituting the world's greatest bureaucracy, has been established. Into the daily conversation of the Nation have crept such new terms as:

Since 1933, 70 agencies, most of them new, have begun the job of administering the Nation's affairs. At the top of many of them were people whose positions were identical with the "master minds" whom Mr. Roosevelt had himself denounced only a few years ago. Billions of dollars have been expended by these agencies in their seizure of control of the Nation's industrial, commercial, and educational activities. Bureaucracy, whose tendency to dominate the national life had been so vigorously denounced, is now in full swing. Mr. Roosevelt's plea for "fewer commissions and more leadership" has been amended to read "more commissions and less leadership."

In still other spheres of action the promise and performance record reads like a fantastic contradiction.

Speaking of Government control of business, Mr. Roosevelt declared on May 7, 1933:

> It is wholly wrong to call the measures that we have taken Government control of farming, control of industry, and control of transportation. It is, rather, a partnership between Government and farming and industry and transportation, not partnership in profits, for the profits would still go to the citizens, but, rather, a partnership in planning and a partnership to see that the plans are carried out.

This was in the days when N. R. A. was in its beginning. Today that partnership has been abandoned. In its place the President of the United States has invoked the Presidential wrath upon "economic royalists," "predatory business," the "malefactors of great wealth." The cooperation and planning of N. R. A. days has given way to prosecutions for violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The partnership between Government and farming has become a partnership in which the Government partner dictates the terms of every agreement, decides every policy.

Addressing itself to the issues of Government in business, the Democratic Party in 1932 urged the "removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest."

Since 1932 the Federal Government, under President Roosevelt's leadership, has put Uncle Sam into direct competition with existing private business on a score of fronts. We have manufactured not only light and electric power in the Tennessee Valley Authority, but also clothing, bedding, and hosiery.

On the basic issue of our governmental structure, Mr. Roosevelt declared in 1930, "The preservation of 'home rule' by the States is not a cry of jealous commonwealths seeking their own aggrandizement at the expense of sister States. It is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country."

Since 1930 things must have changed greatly in Mr. Roosevelt's view, for today the Federal Government has made of the States little more than cringing suppliants asking Federal favors wherever possible. Here is the record of promise and performance which we must analyze in 1940.

Mr. Roosevelt promised:

First. Reduced Federal expenditures.

Second. Mr. Roosevelt regarded a growing deficit in 1932 and 1933 as a tremendous burden upon employment.

Third. A marked decrease in the number of Federal commissions and agencies.

Fourth. Decrease in Government personnel.

Fifth. A pledge to utilize existing agencies and farm credit.

Sixth. A pledge of cooperation with business, farming, and industry.

Mr. Roosevelt gave us:

First. The greatest deficit this country has ever known.

Second. He has repudiated this conception entirely.

Third. The greatest increase in commissions and agencies this Nation has ever known.

Fourth. The largest increase in Government personnel in any 7-year period of our history.

Fifth. A complete negation of the Democratic platform of 1932.

Sixth. The bitterest crusade against businessmen, the most ruthless domination of agriculture this country has ever seen.

This is the record for all to read. The President argues that the contradictions in his program were necessary.

The Nation has witnessed the results of those contradictions. Those results are with us to stay; vast unemployment remaining at an absolutely static level since 1933; a tremendous increase in Government expenditure already being reflected in new tax burdens; a restless undercurrent of hatred rumbling through the population. These are the fruits of Mr. Roosevelt's contradictions.

If we are to enjoy a better harvest in the years to come, it is our task now to change our gardeners.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I understand Roosevelt is getting cold feet; but if he should run he will be able to retire to his international banking business in Wall Street, the business he was in before he went to the White House.

Mr. BENDER. Why should he not get cold feet? When he was elected in 1932 there were some nine or ten millions out of work. Today there are ten millions out of work just as there were then, and our country, instead of having a debt of some $24,000,000,000 or $25,000,000,000 has a debt that is close to the $50,000,000,000 mark. This money is spent, and I say to you that when the American people appreciate the fact, as they will this year, in connection with the special tax levy, this special tax that became effective in part on July 1—and incidentally the Democratic majority in the House and the Democratic leadership here in Washington were so smart that they held off 60 percent of the tax so that it would not be payable until the 1st of next January—but when the American people realize and appreciate what this tremendous debt and these billions for defense is costing them, when they realize and appreciate as they will between now and November that the levy will be twenty-fold what it is now they will change administrations. When they come to a realization of the kind of problem that the American people of this generation and the next generation are faced with because of this fraud which was perpetrated on them in the campaign of 1932 and ever since, I am sure they will be anxious to vote for a man who is a producer, a man who will perform, a man who will give them the kind of relief and the kind of government that Roosevelt promised them in 1932. I am sure we will come out victorious in November, following the standard of Wendell Willkie for President. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I have been reading the Republican platform and wish to call attention to the plank on agriculture.

Mr. KITCHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. There is an article in Fortune by Wendell L. Willkie, and it appears in this month's Readers Digest, wherein Mr. Willkie says that the people know promises to one group will conflict with promises to another, and for that reason the American people are skeptical of political platforms. Would you understand by that that he does not expect the people to pay very much attention to any agricultural provisions of the Republican platform? It is headed "We, the People."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The tenor of his utterances have been so contrary to many statements in the platform that such a conclusion would be plausible.

Mr. Speaker, I have just read the Republican platform adopted at Philadelphia and I read the farm plank first. It might surprise platform makers if they knew how many of those who read platforms at all read the farm plank first.

I congratulate the party on the declaration of its position on agriculture. Heretofore in every platform I have ever read, of either the Republican Party or the Democratic Party, fulsome promises have been made the farmer and every assurance has been given of the complete solution of the agricultural problem, and especially since 1920 the usual commitment has been to secure economic equality with labor and industry. But this platform promises nothing. It endorses nothing that is not already in effect and it pledges nothing that has not been or is now being tried. It is the easiest of fulfillment of any plank that could be drafted, because, if ever invoked, nothing would be required to carry it out except to sit still and leave things as they are. In other words, the agricultural plank in the 1940 platform proposes leaving things as they are. And the farm voter in Novemebr can take it or leave it.

It is true the third sentence starts off:

> The Republican Party will put into effect such governmental policies as will establish and maintain an equitable balance between labor, industry, and agriculture—

Now if they had stopped there, no finer commitment could have been made—no proposal that would more adequately and effectively solve the problems of the American farmer and bring prosperity to both the farmer and the country at large. But unfortunately that is not the commitment. Let us read on:

> The Republican Party will put into effect such governmental policies as will establish and maintain an equitable balance between labor, industry, and agriculture by expanding industrial and business activity, eliminating unemployment, lowering production costs, thereby creating increased consumer buying power for agriculture products.

Which means exactly nothing because we know by sad experience that none of these means are practicable or can possibly achieve equality between agriculture and other industries.

It is as if the platform had said:

> The Republican Party will establish and maintain an adequate Army and Navy.

A pledge all would heartily approve. But if when we read on we found that when completed the sentence read:

> The Republican Party will establish and maintain an adequate Army and Navy by developing the bow and arrow and the rowboat to their highest state of efficiency.

We find the pledge is worthless—just as the Republican pledge to establish farm equality is worthless.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is not a partisan speech. And as disappointing as the farm plank in the Republican platform is, the address of the official spokesman appearing in this morning's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, summarizing the agricultural legislation of the Seventy-sixth Congress and the position of the Committee on Agriculture is just as disappointing—and for the same reason.

Both the Republican platform and the Committee on Agriculture are in accord. According to both everything has been done that needs to be done and the farm problem has been solved. And if we accept either or both, nothing remains to be done but to let present conditions take their course and take the farmer to perdition with them.

The long and carefully prepared address in today's RECORD lists six activities: Soil conservation, low interest rates, marketing agreements, rural electrification, commodity loans, and water uses, which he says amply provide all the legislative and administrative aids needed by the farmer. At least he proposes nothing additional. Since September hogs have dropped from 11 cents to less than 5 cents on the farm. Cotton is selling for less than a dime on the farm. And wheat in the last few weeks has dropped from $1.13 to 69 cents a bushel. And yet the Committee on Agriculture thinks the farmer farm problem is solved and the farmer should be grateful enough to vote the Democratic ticket in November. All this at a time when union wage scales and the price of industrial products have been steadily rising.

Mr. Speaker, soil conservation, low interest, marketing agreements, and all the rest are beneficial as far as they go. But the farmer can have all of them—he can have the best soil, and the lowest rate of interest, and a farm loan, and a free Government pond on his farm, but if he gets less for his products than it costs him to produce them and pays labor and industry a constantly increasing price for their products, it is only a question of time until the sheriff gets the farm. The only thing that will enable a tenant farmer to buy a farm, and the only thing that will enable an owner to hold his farm is a price for his products high enough to pay interest and taxes and cost of production. And it cannot be done with 5-cent hogs and 10-cent cotton and 59-cent wheat when he must pay labor, industry, and transportation more than he paid when he was getting $24 for hogs, 35 cents for cotton, and $2.40 for wheat.

But my friend justifies nickel hogs and dime cotton and says the farmer ought to be content with such prices because they are a little higher than they were in 1932, the lowest ebb of farm prices in the history of the world. Such a contention is too puerile to merit attention. No such argument was advanced against the bills to increase freight rates in the Interstate Commerce Act, fix the price of coal in the bituminous-coal bill, regulate the price of oil in the "hot oil" bill, fix retail prices in the fair-trade bill, fix wages in the wage and hour bill, enforce minimum wages in the Labor Relations Act or the numerous other excellent bills for the benefit of labor, industry, and transportation which have passed this House.

The speaker might with equal logic have compared present farm prices with the prices in 1832 or 1732 as 1932. The real question and the only question to be considered is whether farm prices are equitable, whether they are on a parity with other industries, whether the farmer receives as fair a price for what he sells and he must pay for what he buys. The farmer has been repeatedly promised parity prices by both parties. Congress itself has twice by solemn enactment laid down the principle that he is entitled to a parity price as a minimum. The question is not whether the farmer is getting 1932 prices. Nobody else is getting 1932 prices. The question is whether he is getting parity prices. Here is the report on that question received from the Department of Agriculture this morning:

Comparison of farm, market, and parity prices

Commodity	Unit	June 15, 1940			Current market price
		Parity price	Farm price	Farm price as percent of parity
		Cents	Cents	Percent	Cents
Cotton	Pound	15.87	9.54	60.1	10.45
Corn	Bushel	82.20	63.50	77.3	65.00
Wheat	Bushel	113.20	67.40	59.5	75.50

U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Let us compare these farm figures with like figures for labor and industry. The last wage scales available are for 1939. The disparity would be even greater for 1940.

Comparison of weekly earnings in building and construction, and of factory workers and parity wages

Occupation	1939 (June 1)
	Wages per hour	Hours worked per week	Earnings per week	Earnings as percent of parity	Estimated parity earnings

The trend of costs of living during the decade is indicated in the following table from the May issue of the Monthly Labor Review:

Indexes of retail food costs in 51 large cities combined,[1] by commodity groups, March and February 1940 and March 1929

[1923–25=100]

Commodity group	1940		1929
	Mar. 12	Feb. 13	Mar. 15
All foods	77.1	78.1	101.4
Cereals and bakery products	88.7	88.7	98.2
Meats	88.3	87.8	118.6
Dairy products	81.3	82.7	105.2
Eggs	57.4	68.7	87.4
Fruits and vegetables	62.7	62.9	86.9
Fresh	61.3	61.5	84.7
Canned	75.0	75.0	97.1
Dried	63.7	63.6	101.3
Beverages	65.1	65.3	110.9
Fats and oils	60.3	60.7	93.8
Sugar	64.1	64.6	73.5

[1] Aggregate costs of 84 foods in each city prior to September 1939, and of 53 foods since that date, weighted to represent total purchases, have been combined for the United States with the use of population weights.
[2] Preliminary.

Official figures on parity of industrial income are not available, but the following table from Productivity, Wages, and National Income, published by the Brookings Institution, shows the relative income of 1938 to the income of 1919 which was at the peak of World War prices and far above parity:

Distribution of income in the manufacturing industry

	1919	1938	Percent of increase
Salaries	$2,776	$2,814	101.0
Cash dividends	1,353	1,905	140.7
Earnings on capital	1,893	2,111	111.5

In other words, labor and industry are from 101 percent to 172 percent above parity while agriculture is from 59 percent to 77 percent below parity, and yet the Committee on Agriculture considers the problem solved and no further legislation necessary.

Standardization of labor and industrial incomes and maintenance above parity are due solely to legislation, and fluctuation of agricultural income and depression below parity are the result of lack of legislation.

Farm prices have been slightly supported by the parity payments provided from appropriations provided by the Committee on Appropriations in the last two Congresses. How inadequate these makeshift measures meet the need is shown by the following tabulation issued by the University of Illinois based in its Bulletin No. 19, issued January 2, 1940, based on the United States Statistical Abstract of 1939:

Comparative increases in income directly due to legislation

Illinois	Railroad employee	Farmer
Average cash income for 1939	$1,520.96	$428.77
Average increase by congressional action	336.70	70.75
Total income for 1939	1,857.66	499.52

The farmer may have been a college graduate. The average railroad employee seldom goes beyond the high school. The railroad employee had nothing invested but a pair of overalls, and worked 30 hours a week without assistance from his family. The farmer had capital invested in land, buildings, machinery, and stock, and worked 98 hours a week, and every member of his family old enough to walk assisted him in earning the $499.52, which represented not only the wage from the combined family but the income on his investment as well. But the Committee on Agriculture considers itself munificent in providing the $70.75 a year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now since he has additional time?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. My distinguished friend here made an observation to the gentleman from Missouri with reference to the skeptical attitude of Mr. Willkie on the matter of platforms. I wondered whether my friend from Missouri might not concur with me that that skepticism is very largely due to the feeling of the American people which arises from their experience with the 1932 and 1936 platforms of the Democratic Party.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I think that if we examine the platforms of both parties from 1920 on down we will be rather inclined to take the position that a political platform is something to get in on and of little concern thereafter.

And, Mr. Speaker, this is the high-water mark. Farm prices are falling and wages and industrial prices are rising every day. The disparity every day becomes more pronounced. Here are five headlines from the same page of Sunday's Washington Star summarizing trends for the week:

Wheat prices slump 2 cents a bushel at Chicago; corn down 3 cents; rye declines more than a cent.

Cotton futures dip 1 to 8 points after early gains. Liquidation in July contract and hedging bring late slump.

Washington living costs losing, price average stays below levels for 1937 and 1938.

United States industry reaches highest midyear marks in decade.

District of Columbia bank clearings far above year ago during June, 6 months' volume largest for period since 1930.

And this trend will be accelerated. All authorities and commentators agree that the war in Europe cannot last beyond September. It may end any day. And when it does farm prices, as pitiable as they are, will crash in utter ruin unless legislation is provided to put a floor under farm prices, as has already been put under wages and industrial prices. This is not surmise. It is not speculation. The war must end, and when the war ends European markets will be closed to American products. Norwegian, Danish, Dutch, and Belgian imports ceased with German occupation. The Secretary of Agriculture has just issued the following bulletin:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1940.

FRANCE FIFTH BEST CUSTOMER FOR PRODUCTS OF UNITED STATES FARMS

If France should be cut off from American markets, the United States would lose its fifth best customer for farm products, the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations of the Department of Agriculture said today. Farm products were nearly 30 percent of all United States exports to France in 1938 and over 17 percent in 1939. During both years France was fifth among world outlets for United States farm products and third in Europe, after the United Kingdom and the Netherlands.

The value of United States agricultural exports to France in different years and their percent of total farm exports in each year follows:

Year	Total value	Percent of total
1929	$103,041,000	6.2
1932	47,657,000	7.2
1935	53,355,000	7.1
1936	63,100,000	8.9
1937	60,357,000	7.6
1938	38,970,000	4.7
1939	30,818,000	4.7

The outstanding item in United States agricultural export trade with France is cotton. Cotton was about 70 percent of United States farm exports to France in 1939 and 63 percent in 1938.

Since the publication of this bulletin exports to France have practically ceased. And, regardless of who wins or loses, Europe will not afford a market for American products for years to come. The end approaches. And yet with that certainty staring us in the face, the Committee on Agriculture makes the statement in this morning's RECORD complacently preening itself on present farm conditions and with no reference to any possible activity for the rest of the session.

Congress will remain in session the remainder of the summer. It will be useless to incorporate bombastic planks in the Chicago platform if we sit idly by and give no thought to the welfare of agriculture beyond that indicated in this speech.

More than 1,800 years ago the Master, with the twelve, as they plodded, hungry and thirsty, down the dusty roads of Judea came upon the fig tree and found thereon no fruit. And He gave utterance there to one of the greatest truths in all the pages of Holy Writ: "By their fruits shall ye know them." We judge political parties as we judge men—not by what they say, not by what they promise, not by their platform commitments, but by what they do.

In this supreme crisis in American history, the Committee on Agriculture should either meet to consider the situation or they should resign. The master is coming down the road along about the second Tuesday in November. And several luxuriant but barren fig trees on the committee might well take notice.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Every Member with whom I have talked, on both sides of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, say that the overwhelming sentiment in their districts is that we remain here all summer, and as the gentleman knows, I have a resolution for remaining in session all the summer, and we certainly should be here in case of any eventuality.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I trust the lady favors taking advantage of the time while we are here, with nothing else to do, to handle this pressing question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do and I feel we should be here and not at home and that we should not adjourn.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Is the gentlewoman doing anything to meet the farm situation?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Always, I have been in favor of it, but I believe in staying in Washington and doing it from here. We can do more here than if we should adjourn and I am glad the gentleman stated Congress will not adjourn.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 1, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter dated June 27, 1940, from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to the provisions of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), an act to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation at $100,000,000 and for other purposes, an appraisal of all the assets and liabilities of the said Corporation as of March 31, 1940.

On the basis of such appraisal the Commodity Credit Corporation has been directed to deposit in the Treasury the sum of $43,756,731.01. During the fiscal year 1938 it was necessary for the Congress to appropriate $94,285,404.73 to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation and it was necessary for the Congress to appropriate for the fiscal year 1939, a further amount of $119,599,918.05 to maintain unimpaired the capital of the Corporation. There has been appropriated $213,885,322.78 for this purpose, and after giving effect to the recovery of $43,756,731.01 during the current fiscal year, the net expenditures for the last 3 years amount to $170,128,591.77.

The policy adopted by the Congress and incorporated in the act approved March 8, 1938, providing for an annual appraisal of the assets of the Commodity Credit Corporation makes it possible to include currently in each annual budget the expenditures necessary to support the program which that Corporation is engaged upon or the receipts which the Government receives from that activity.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

HON. JOHN NANCE GARNER,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

OUTLAWING OF SUBVERSIVE POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter which I have received from the American Legion of Salt Lake City, Utah, Post No. 2, together with a resolution adopted by that splendid organization.

There being no objection, the letter and the resolution were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION, SALT LAKE POST, NO. 2,
Salt Lake City, Utah, June 21, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senator, Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KING: We transmit herewith copy of resolution adopted by Salt Lake Post, No. 2, the American Legion, at its regular meeting held at Salt Lake City, Utah, on June 20, 1940, concerning certain legislation now pending before Congress outlawing the illegal and improper use of political organizations for subversive purposes. As there indicated, we trust you will give your full support to the adoption of such legislation.

We will appreciate your prompt acknowledgment of the enclosed resolution and an indication as to your attitude on the proposed legislation.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) B. K. FARNSWORTH,
Commander, Salt Lake Post, No. 2, the American Legion.
(Signed) WM. J. HIGBEE,
Adjutant, Salt Lake Post, No. 2, the American Legion.

Resolution adopted by Salt Lake Post, No. 2, the American Legion, at a regular meeting of the post held at Salt Lake City, Utah, on June 20, 1940

Salt Lake Post, No. 2, the American Legion, acting in conformity with the policy of the American Legion as indicated by resolutions adopted at its national convention assembled at Chicago, State of Illinois, September 25–28, 1939, inclusive, hereby requests the Members of the House of Representatives and the Members of the United States Senate from the State of Utah to support legislation now pending before the Congress of the United States having for its purpose the outlawing as political parties groups sponsored by or affiliated with any foreign power or foreign political regime.

We recognize the necessity at this time of guarding jealously the civil liberties of the citizens of the Republic. We believe it is better to suffer the evils of abuse of these civil liberties than to adopt a course of conduct which will impinge upon them even in the smallest degree. The protection of these civil liberties is an obligation of every citizen. In times of hysteria or public excitement any attempt to limit the free exercise of citizenship should be carefully examined.

However, it has been definitely and surely established that subversive groups in the United States have used, and are using, the privileges of citizenship in order to destroy our system of free government. It is, therefore, the duty of every citizen to prevent such illegal and wrongful devices and subterfuges to the end that the liberties of all loyal citizens may be protected and sustained. Liberty of conscience, freedom of press, freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, and the right of suffrage must not become implements of those who seek to destroy the American way of life.

There has been a notorious abuse and subversion of the right of suffrage. Communist, Nazi, and Fascist groups have used the disguise of political organization to further their nefarious objectives. They have not been, and are not now traditional political parties. They have used constitutional facilities for the purpose of destroying the Government of the United States and imposing upon this Nation a form or forms of government sponsored by tyrants and dictators of the Old World.

Political differences must and should exist in a free republic, and the spirit of any bona fide and loyal political groups to organize as a political party must always be protected. The use of party organization, however, for the purpose of destroying the government which gives this freedom of suffrage cannot be tolerated by loyal citizens.

Upon this basis and for these reasons, this petition is submitted with the hope that proposed legislation above-described will be adopted by the Congress of the United States.

(Signed) B. K. FARNSWORTH,
Commander, Salt Lake Post, No. 2.
(Signed) WM. J. HIGBEE,
Adjutant.

AMERICAN DECLARATION OF NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred the American declaration of national unity by the Council Against Intolerance in America, of which the Senator from New Jersey is one of the co-chairmen.

There being no objection, the declaration was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN DECLARATION OF NATIONAL UNITY

Independence Day has greater significance this year than ever before. Always an occasion of rejoicing, it has become a festival of thanksgiving, a call to rededication, a symbol of hope.

For today, war and tyranny have overwhelmed many foreign nations; disloyal elements within our borders undermine national unity by fomenting racial hatred and religious bigotry; antidemocratic forces seek to abrogate civil, political, and economic liberties; dictatorships abroad and traitors at home assail the very ideals of freedom and equality on which this Nation was founded.

These ideals and the institutions derived from them, however, are no less precious to the American people today than in 1776. They are our treasured heritage, our most sacred trust. They still make life worth living. They are still worth defending. If need be, they are still worth dying for.

It is therefore fitting that on this fourth day of July 1940 we Americans renew the covenant of our forefathers, and reaffirm among ourselves and before all mankind:

That all men are created equal.

That the freedom of Americans—which assures liberty of conscience, of speech, of assembly and of the press—is vital to the defense of our country against foreign and domestic foes.

That the equality of Americans—which includes all races, creeds, and colors—recognizes the contributions of each to upbuilding the Nation, and makes loyalty to our country the only test of Christian or Jew, white or Negro, native or foreign-born.

That on these principles of freedom and equality, the American people stand united, and in defense of our national unity—whatever difficulties and dangers lie ahead—we, as did our forefathers, mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

"WE THE AMERICANS"—PETITION

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, also for the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred a petition presented by "We the Americans," a national organization for the protection of constitutional government, Philadelphia, Pa.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"WE THE AMERICANS," INC.,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 19, 1940.

A PETITION

To the Congress of the United States:

Whereas it is necessary that eternal vigilance be exercised by our representatives in the Congress of the United States in order that our American form of government may be preserved and to avoid the danger of unconstitutional actions by individual officials who might involve this country in a foreign war; and

Whereas the world situation is most critical and requires careful and sound reasoning by our representatives in the Congress: Now, therefore,

"We the Americans," a national organization for the protection of constitutional government, and for other purposes, hereby petitions the Congress of the United States to remain in continuous session for the duration of the war in Europe.

Respectfully submitted.

"1709. It shall be the duty of a consular officer, or, if no consular officer is present, a diplomatic officer, under such procedural regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe—

"First. To take possession and to dispose of the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, except a seaman who is a member of the crew of an American vessel, who shall die within or is domiciled at time of death within his jurisdiction: Provided, That such procedure is authorized by treaty provisions or permitted by the laws or authorities of the country wherein the death occurs, or the decedent is domiciled, or that such privilege is accorded by established usage: Provided further, That the decedent shall leave in the country where the death occurred or where he was domiciled, no legal representative, partner in trade, or trustee by him appointed to take care of his personal estate. A consular officer or, in his absence, a diplomatic officer shall act as the provisional conservator of the personal property within his jurisdiction of a deceased citizen of the United States but, unless authorized by treaty provisions, local law, or usage, he shall not act as administrator of such personal property. He shall render assistance in guarding, collecting, and transmitting the property to the United States to be disposed of according to the law of the decedent's domicile.

"Second. After having taken possession of the personal property, as provisional conservator, to inventory and carefully appraise the effects, article by article, with the assistance of two competent persons who, together with such officer, shall sign the inventory and annex thereto an appropriate certificate as to the accuracy of the appraised value of each article.

"Third. To collect the debts due to the decedent in his jurisdiction and pay from the estate the obligations owed there by the decedent.

"Fourth. To sell at auction, after reasonable public notice, unless the amount involved does not justify such expenditure, such part of the estate as shall be of a perishable nature, and after reasonable public notice and notice to next of kin if they can be ascertained by reasonable diligence such further part, if any, as shall be necessary for the payment of the decedent's debts incurred in such country, and funeral expenses, and expenses incident to the disposition of the estate. If, at the expiration of 1 year from the date of death (or for such additional period as may be required for final settlement of the estate) no claimant shall appear, the residue of the estate, with the exception of investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value, shall be sold.

"Fifth. To transmit to the General Accounting Office the proceeds of the sale (and any unsold effects, such as investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms, or other articles having a sentimental value), there to be held in trust for the legal claimant. If, however, at any time prior to such transmission, the decedent's legal representative should appear and demand the proceeds and effects in the officer's hands, he shall deliver them to such representative after having collected the prescribed fee therefor.

"The Comptroller General of the United States, or such member of the General Accounting Office as he may duly empower to act as his representative for the purpose, shall act as conservator of such parts of these estates as may be received by the General Accounting Office or are in its possession, and may, when deemed to be in the interest of the estate, sell such effects, including bonds, shares of stock, notes of indebtedness, jewelry, or other articles, which have heretofore or may hereafter be so received, and pay the expenses of such sale out of the proceeds: Provided, That application for such effects shall not have been made by the legal claimant within 6 years after their receipt. The Comptroller General is authorized, for and in behalf of the estate of the deceased, to receive any balances due to such estates, to draw therefor on banks, safe deposits, trust or loan companies, or other like institutions, to endorse all checks, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and take such other action as may be deemed necessary for the conservation of such estates. The net proceeds of such sales, together with such other moneys as may be collected by him, shall be deposited into the Treasury to a fund in trust for the legal claimant and reported to the Secretary of State.

"If no claim to the effects the proceeds of which have been so deposited shall have been received from a legal claimant of the deceased within 6 years from the date of the receipt of the effects by the General Accounting Office, the funds so deposited, with any remaining unsold effects, less transmittal charges, shall be transmitted by that office to the proper officer of the State or Territory of the last domicile in the United States of the deceased citizen, if known, or if not, such funds shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts on account of proceeds of deceased citizens, and any such remaining unsold effects shall be disposed of by the General Accounting Office in such manner as, in the judgment of the Comptroller General, is deemed appropriate, or they may be destroyed if considered no longer possessed of any value: Provided, That when the estate shall be valued in excess of $500, and no claim therefor has been presented to the General Accounting Office by a legal claimant within the period specified in this paragraph or the legal claimant is unknown, before disposition of the estate as provided herein, notice shall be given by publishing once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the last known domicile of the deceased, in the United States, the expense thereof to be deducted from the proceeds of such estate, and any lawful claim received as the result of such advertisement shall be adjusted and settled as provided for herein.

"1710. For the information of the representative of the deceased, the consular officer, or, if no consular officer is present, a diplomatic officer, in the settlement of his estate shall immediately notify his death in one of the gazettes published in the consular district, and also to the Secretary of State, that the same may be notified in the State to which the deceased belonged; and he shall, as soon as may be, transmit to the Secretary of State an inventory of the effects of the deceased taken as before directed.

"1711. When a citizen of the United States dies in a foreign country and leaves, by any lawful testamentary disposition, special directions for the custody and management, by the consular officer, or in his absence a diplomatic officer, within whose jurisdiction the death occurred, of the personal property in the foreign country which he possessed at the time of death, such officer shall, so far as the laws of the foreign country permit, strictly observe such directions if not contrary to the laws of the United States. If such citizen has named, by any lawful testamentary disposition, any other person than a consular officer or diplomatic officer to take charge of and manage such property, it shall be the duty of the officer, whenever required by the person so named, to give his official aid in whatever way may be practicable to facilitate the proceedings of such person in the lawful execution of his trust, and, so far as the laws of the country or treaty provisions permit, to protect the property of the deceased from any interference by the authorities of the country where such citizen died. To this end it shall be the duty of the consular officer, or if no consular officer is present a diplomatic officer, to safeguard the decedent's property by placing thereon his official seal and to break and remove such seal only upon the request of the person designated by the deceased to take charge of and manage his property."

The motion was agreed to.

INA JONES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2561) for the relief of Ina Jones, which was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "settlement", to insert "of all claims against the United States."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OVER CERTAIN TERRITORIES AND ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1114) to extend the jurisdiction of the United States District Court, Territory of Hawaii, over the Midway Islands, Wake Island, Johnston Island, Sand Island, Kingman Reef, Kure Island, Baker Island, Howland Island, Jarvis Island, Canton Island, Enderbury Island, and for other purposes, which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after "Island", where it appears the second time, down to and including "thereto" in line 6 of page 2.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SPEECHES AND LETTERS BY HON. HENRY F. ASHURST, OF ARIZONA, AND OTHER DATA

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several letters written by me, certain speeches I have delivered, and bills introduced by me which became laws.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the Senate Monday, April 8, 1940

TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator said he would be delighted to speak a week. I am one of many Senators who would not be wearied if he did speak a week.

If the Senator will pardon me for a reference—it is hardly a question—I want to interject something into his speech.

OLD-AGE PENSION PLAN

A very able citizen, not residing in my State, wrote to me, "I understand you are going to support the Townsend old-age pension plan as it is to be introduced by Senator DOWNEY. I would like to know what you mean. Can you explain it?" The explanation I made to that citizen was to send him the bill, with the statement, "The bill itself is the strongest argument I can make for the bill." He was fair enough to reply, "Having read the bill, I am for it."

In this life we are beset by many perplexing things and frequently we are in doubt as to which way to turn. One of the rules of moral philosophy is that, in the effort to discover what is right and what is wrong, we should search for simplicity. Truth is generally to be identified by its extreme simplicity. A complicated matter, crisscrossed by many lines, difficult of discernment and of analysis, may be suspected. The very simplicity of the Senator's new Townsend bill indicates its truth and its strength.

If I am correct in my analysis of the bill, it does not cancel or stop any issue, rent, profit, or income any person receives. A person may be eligible for this pension at 60 years of age, provided he or she does not receive or earn any salary or wages. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DOWNEY. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. A boy 12 years of age could compute on the back of a postal card just how much each citizen owed and should pay the Government under the new Townsend old-age pension plan. Am I correct about that?

Mr. DOWNEY. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Note the simplicity. Experts are sent from the Bureau of Internal Revenue each year so that we may forsooth have help in making out our income-tax returns. Under existing law the most well-intentioned man must have the aid of an expert in making out his return. That is what annoys and perplexes the citizen. The American citizen is glad to pay something to his Government, but he objects to the annoyance of being constantly beset by a number of perplexing questions he must answer, with the fear that he may be entrapped, notwithstanding he is trying to be fair.

I wish to commend to the Senate and to the country this new Townsend bill which the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] has proposed. Senators will be amazed at its simplicity. I repeat, a 12-year-old boy with his pencil could compute on the back of a postal card how much any citizen owed the Government under the Townsend pay-as-you-go plan.

Moreover, in this bill Dr. Townsend has hit upon a truth which may ultimately prove to be the solution of this country's financial troubles. We may come to it, and I think we should. The suggestion is, no appropriation without a tax side by side with it to pay the appropriation.

Some wise man someday will drive through Congress a measure, or the American people will adopt a constitutional amendment, providing that there shall be no appropriation without a tax to accompany it. That will prove to be something which will aid the Government in meeting its bills in the future. It might prevent extreme inflation. Senators would find a pleasure in knowing that when they made an appropriation there would be a tax accompanying it. Am I correct in saying the new bill so provides?

Mr. DOWNEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. I have studied the new Townsend old age pension plan to be proposed by the Senator from California, for more than 2 months. I have given it the best thought of which I have been capable, and I hope the House will send it to us; I suppose the House will have to originate it. I happened to know the Senator from California when he was a very young boy, and I inflicted a torrent of words on an occasion when he was present more than 35 years ago in a county courthouse in the West. I know that he is a very able lawyer, and his career at the bar demonstrates that he has practiced law with much success.

Let us assume a Senator whose salary is $10,000 a year; he and all other citizens would be entitled to deduct $3,000 as their exemption, which would leave $7,000 taxable at 2 percent, and his tax would be $140 a year.

There is not a Senator, not a Member of the House, in my judgment, who would not be delighted to make that contribution. The precedent set would be wholesome.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I may add further, if the Senator will yield, to say that this conception of a gross-income tax is not new. The State of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] has a gross-income tax now and has had for some time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I might add that the State of Minnesota for more than 40 years has taxed its railroads on the basis of gross earnings, and many of our State taxes are earmarked for certain purposes.

Mr. DOWNEY. I cannot conclude my remarks, Mr. President, without discussing somewhat the experience I had with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], to which he adverted awhile ago, and I must say that it is partly the example of the distinguished Senator from Arizona that makes me want to talk another week upon this subject, though I feel compelled to restrict myself to an additional 15 minutes.

Like the Senator, I come from the great and boundless West. In my younger days I spent some time around a lonely mining camp near Winnemucca, which is out on the desert of Nevada, where the great boast of the prospectors and the people generally is that one of the great statesmen and speakers and philosophers of America was born there, to wit, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I have never told the Senator that before, but many times when I have been out in the lonely mining camps in the deserts of Nevada I have found the people there still talking of Senator ASHURST. Senator ASHURST was taken to Arizona when a mere child.

At one time, when I was about 17 or 18 years of age, when I had been expelled from a preparatory school, my father sent me out to labor in the world with a surveying crew, and one day I came into the town of Flagstaff, Ariz. And as I approached the courthouse I saw a great crowd surrounding the building and there was a great air of excitement. As I walked up to the steps to see what the occurrence was I heard a booming, vibrant voice coming out from the courtroom. I asked one of the bystanders what was up and he told me there was a famous murder case at trial and that a young district attorney, who was known as the silver-tongued orator of Coconino County, was making an address for the prosecution. Even then I was interested in oratory, so I decided to listen and finally wormed my way up into a crowded window, and I looked out into the courtroom where I could see the judge upon the bench, the unfortunate defendant, and the jury, and there addressing the jury was a great, broad-shouldered, fine-looking young man, I guess of 26 or 27, holding forth with powerful magnetic oratory. The first thing I heard him say, Mr. President, was this:

"Now, gentlemen of the jury, as I stated to you when I began this argument 1 week ago [laughter], I had 10 points to develop. I have now covered the first 2, and I am going to proceed to the third one. [Laughter.]"

I might say, Mr. President, that right there my surveying crew lost an employee, because I stayed to listen to all the points, and I lost nearly a month's salary.

When I was an amateur in the Senate several months ago, in my first session, there had been long and laborious arguments, and some of the columnists had been complaining because the Senators were taking up so much time, either stating what was obviously so, or worse, what was obviously not so, and I think our most distinguished orator, the Senator from Arizona, who combines a perfect facility of language with a great philosophy and a great poetical imagination, rose and said there and then that he believed that any Senator, without exception, should be able to say all that he had in his mind in the brief space of 15 minutes. That took me back to those Flagstaff days when I had heard him talking as a young lawyer.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would be lacking in grace and would be either less than human or more than human if I did not thank the genial and able Senator from California, whom, as I said, I have known since his boyhood, and whom I am proud to call my friend.

EXTRACT FROM AN ARTICLE BY ALVA JOHNSTON IN THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, DECEMBER 25, 1937

Senator ASHURST has always had reverence for the elder Senator Lodge and for other scholars in politics, like President Theodore Roosevelt and the late Senator Bronson Cutting. He probably knows more quotations than the three of them together, but they knew Greek, and ASHURST doesn't. The Arizonian is not a Latin scholar, but he has memorized innumerable Latin quotations. All the Latin that he knows he knows by heart. It is almost as dangerous to misquote Latin as English in his presence. He is industrious and is vigilant about Arizona affairs. One of the points in his favor is that he has refused to practice law on the side. ASHURST regards that sort of thing as beneath his dignity; he thinks, also, it would interfere with his scholarly pursuits and with his diligence in Arizona's and the Nation's business. He could roll in wealth if he were willing to sell his name, for his prestige as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee could be made an important commercial asset.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1940.

Gen. FRANK T. HINES,
Administrator, Veterans' Affairs, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GENERAL HINES: When H. R. 12175 was pending in the Senate of the Sixty-ninth Congress, I offered an amendment which was adopted by the Senate and became a part of Public Law No. 448.

My amendment provided for certain compensation to ex-service men suffering from tuberculosis of a "compensable degree," and, for the lack of a better description, has come to be known as the Ashurst amendment.

Will you please inform me as to the number of ex-service men now receiving compensation under the provisions of my amendment, and also please further advise me as to the gross sum of money (compensation) which to date has been paid to ex-service men under and by virtue of this Ashurst amendment and its subsequent amendments?

With high esteem, sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, April 17, 1940.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: Reference is made to your letter of April 11, 1940, requesting information as to the total cost of paying a statutory $50 award to World War veterans suffering from a tuberculous disease of a compensable degree which has reached a condition of complete arrest.

There are now on the rolls approximately 41,400 veterans who are receiving a statutory award of $50 for arrested tuberculosis, and the total cost of this provision of the law to date is approximately $207,091,000.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES,
Administrator.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. ASHURST. My proposed amendment strikes at an evil in our system of taxation which is already great, and if unchecked will grow—indeed has grown—to such magnitude as to threaten the existence of our institutions.

The existence of conditions that enable any municipality or political subdivision to issue tax-free securities directly permits a certain class of property owners to partake of the comforts and benefits of governments without bearing any share of the expense burden of government.

All private property should pay its just proportion of the expense of maintaining the Government.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities permits:

(1) A large portion of property to escape taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue.

(2) It violates the sound tax principle of "ability to pay," and it unfairly discriminates among taxpayers.

(3) It discourages investment in new enterprises.

(4) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies.

(5) It grants private subsidies and special privileges, obnoxious to our system.

(6) By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government, and thereby adds to the cost of living.

(7) It creates, and quite naturally, social unrest.

Vigor and vision are the supreme need of the hour, and unless we act with promptness on this subject, the National Government and some of the States will bog down and sink into the grasp of the all-smothering, all-destroying quicksands of insolvency.

SEA POWER

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it was sea power that saved Rome from Greece.

It was sea power that saved Greece from Persia.

It was sea power that gave to the Phoenicians the command of the ancient maritime world. Sea power built up the far-flung commercial empire of Carthage. Sea power made Athens ruler of vast territories, and it was sea power that made the Rome of antiquity mistress of the civilized world. Rome could not have subsisted without her sea power, because nearly all her wheat came overseas.

When Spain had great sea power she dominated Christendom; and Spain's decline began when storms and British seamanship wrecked her great Armada.

The sea power of the American Colonies with the sea power of France won the American Revolution, and the naval blockade defeated the Confederacy.

During the World War the Allies would have starved had it not been for sea power.

TO AUTHORIZE LOANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS—LOANS TO SMALL MINES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we should read history because we learn from reading history that we learn nothing from history. Let us for once, however, learn something from history. In times of antiquity when men went to battle, personal valor and esprit de corps usually turned the tide. In those far-off days, weapons were of iron, copper, zinc, sometimes of bronze, a composition of copper and tin; sometimes of brass, a combination of copper and zinc; sometimes a weapon was fashioned of hardwood, and often a spear head or arrow point was made from volcanic glass called obsidian; and now and then, forsooth, a shield was made from tough bull hide. Some armies used catapults to hurl stones and some armies were equipped with chariots with bladed wheels. Those days have gone. Chivalry, personal courage, physical prowess, and moral indignation then counted for much and frequently determined the destiny of nations. But, Mr. President, in recent years we have learned that the valor of the brave is of little or no avail against mechanized armies or remorseless engines pointed at human hearts which are only flesh and blood. We have recently seen France, with a valor beyond the range of eulogy, walk the path of duty, death, and glory. Valor availed nothing against mechanized armies.

Mr. President, at this time I refer to the labors of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the labors of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] in the efforts they have put forth to procure for the Nation strategic, critical, and essential minerals. It will be remembered that during the World War we were required to depend upon importations from foreign countries for many strategic and critical minerals.

In a time of trouble we cannot depend upon supplies of strategic and critical minerals from foreign countries. The Creator in His beneficence and judgment has deposited in the hills of the United States nearly all, if not all, the minerals necessary for industry and for the defense of the United States if we will but develop them.

Mr. President, there has been talk of an adjournment of Congress. In the most perilous age of the world's history, when civilization is in deadly danger, there are men—they are not in the Senate, they are not in the House—who talk of adjourning, of running away and abandoning duties. Let me say to you, Mr. President, that those who vote to go home should be kept there. We cannot add to the efficiency and strength of the United States by running away and abandoning the duties we were elected, sworn, and paid to perform.

There is no remorse so inveterate, so keen, as that which comes from the consciousness that we abandoned duty in a day of national distress. There is no happiness more sustaining and unselfish than that derived from the consciousness that we performed our duty in a manner worthy of American Senators. Success, safety, and efficiency fly upon high and rapid wing; they must be seized as they pass by; once gone they may not be overtaken.

I have announced that I am a candidate for reelection to the Senate. I am opposed by able and worthy opponents. I have some fences in a bad state of disrepair; I should like to go home to repair them; but, Mr. President, I would be unworthy to be heard here for a moment if I placed the mending of my political fences and the care of my political fortunes above the success, safety, and efficiency of my country and above the preparation and rearmament for its defense.

If we are to assist the President of the United States in carrying out his program of preparedness, let us take steps toward acquiring the strategic and critical minerals so necessary to our national life. I refer particularly to manganese. We have an abundance of manganese if it is developed. During the World War the ship Cyclops, laden with manganese from Brazil, was sunk without trace with over 300 souls on board. Laden with manganese for the United States, she went down to the airless meadows of the cavernous deep. Nothing has been heard of her since.

Manganese, as every Senator knows, is used to "sweeten" pig iron and to make steel. I shall not tire the Senate by reciting the long list of the strategic and critical minerals necessary for our defense. It is not proposed to put the Government into the mining business. The Government, forsooth, cannot go out and discover a mine. It is not equipped to do so. The prospectors and miners of our country, if given an opportunity to obtain credit, will produce the necessary strategic and critical minerals.

In the Senate, July 28, 1939

TO AUTHORIZE LOANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS—LOANS TO SMALL MINES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the amendment extends and enlarges the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans to small mines and prospectors. In the present situation the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans only to facilitate the exploration and development of gold mines, silver mines, and tin mines.

The American prospector dwells in the future; he has faith in the future, and has faith in himself. He is willing that a couple of burros may be his companions. I wish I had the time, as I have the inclination, to pay a tribute to the burro; he conquered the desert. The prospector with his burro and a grubstake—the word "grubstake" is a definite, valid locution, it is known to the law—searches for minerals.

His grubstake arises from the fact that some friend, possibly some merchant or other person, advances to the prospector supplies, blankets, powder, and other equipment, with the understanding that as to what the prospector may discover in the way of minerals, the man furnishing the grubstake shall be entitled to whatever proportion of the "discovery" the contract calls for, and such a contract is valid.

Many able and thoughtful persons erroneously believe that any man may go out and through some happy stroke, without much effort, discover a rich mine. That might happen in the realm of fiction, but such experience is so rare in this practical world that no substantial dependence may be placed upon it. The development of a mine is like the gathering of waters to form a great river. The Mississippi River, for example, does not spring forth full panoplied like Minerva from the brow of Jove; it comes from a small alpine spring here, a slender stream there, snow melting on yonder hills, slender stream joining stream, multiplied again and again, swelling in volume as it flows, until it becomes a mighty river, fed originally by a multitude of meandering streams.

So it is with a great mine. The prospector goes forth with his grubstake; he finds what appears to him to be a good prospect; he finds "float." He stakes out his claim, he does "discovery work." With strong arm and unerring eye he directs the point of a miner's pick and develops his mining claim.

He may not have adequate means, and his backers may not have adequate means with which practically to develop the discovery, but if he can borrow $2,000, $3,000, or $5,000 he may develop his discovery. He may meet failure. But he is—I was going to say endowed, but I shall say he is endued with hope and zeal. He believes in the mineral resources of his country; he believes in his luck and, with courage and strength, he strikes the breast of the mountain and minerals gush forth—sometimes, not always. Small mines sometimes become great mines, and most great mines were once small mines.

Mr. President, the Government may not, in the nature of things, employ prospectors and direct prospecting. For the discovery of these critical and strategic minerals so important to industry and to national defense we cannot depend upon the Government; we must depend upon the initiative, the boldness, the energy, and the courage of the prospector.

LATTER-DAY SAINTS

[Remarks of Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona, Tuesday, November 11, 1919]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Utah, Mr. Smoot, has spoken as he has. It was time for such a speech. A matchless maker of epigrams said that when "once a lie or a counterfeit statement gets into circulation it is well-nigh impossible to overtake it"; and therefore I believe the Senator from Utah has done a service to his country in exposing this infamous slander which has been published broadcast against so many worthy people.

When I read the article I felt offended because there are in Arizona a large number of Mormon people, or people who belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints; and I would be false to that principle of fair play for which I have always pretended that I stood if I failed at this time to say a word on the subject.

It may be that I do not understand fully the theology of the Mormon Church; but, Mr. President, the first church I ever attended was a Mormon church. When there was no other church within 100 miles of the lonely frontier cabin where my parents lived, we found solace and comfort in attending the Mormon church situated 9 miles distant. Our nearest—in fact, our only—neighbors for years were the Mormon people. Better neighbors no pioneer ever had. I am proud of the Mormon people. I am proud of the friendship that I have for them and that I believe they have for me, and I am able to say here in the Senate of the United States that their church has elevated many intellects and purified many hearts in my State.

As pioneers in a new country the Mormons are unrivaled. They are sober, industrious, frugal, honest. They are preeminently State builders; and today, if called upon to name a people who could most expeditiously transform a desert into splendid fields and farms, I would unhesitatingly choose the Mormon people. In many places where once the cacti lifted thorn arms into the brazen and heated air Mormon industry has reared temples, hospitals, homes, factories, and schools.

Moreover, I never saw a Mormon I. W. W.; but I have at some county courthouses in my State heard disgruntled, lazy, and indolent men who did not belong to the Mormon Church sit on the steps of the courthouse and curse the Government, while Mormon citizens were going into the same county courthouse to pay taxes without complaint.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a question.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a tenet of the Mormons to teach and preach industry and thrift?

Mr. ASHURST. I am able to state that industry and thrift are amongst the foundation stones of the Mormon Church. Absolute and unquestioned obedience to law is a tenet of the Mormon Church. Respect for authority is one of the tenets of the Mormon Church. We need more of such people in these perilous times of the Republic; and, again, I would be false to every principle of justice and to every sentiment of gratitude if I failed to state at this time that when savage Indians galloped along by our pioneer homes, burning and murdering, plundering and scalping as they went, it was to the Mormon people that my defenseless but heroic parents went for refuge and defense.

Mr. President, I say the Senator from Utah has done well in "scotching" this falsehood, which has been given such wide circulation. I believe the American people are coming at last fully to understand the Mormon people. Their temples, schools, fields, homes, industry, frugality, their morality, and their patriotism testify for them in more eloquent terms than the Senator or I could speak. Then, again, observe their Representatives in the House and in the Senate. Look at the high class of public servants they send here. I ask that the Mormons be judged as a people, judged as a religion, by their fruits; and if they be judged by their fruits the verdict of the world will be in their favor.

It seems to me that the time should be welcomed in America when men shall not further be assailed because of their religion or lack of religion. Men ought not further be assailed or discriminated against because of their particular view of how to follow the Master. America was built up, and one of the reasons for the migrations from the old countries to these shores was that our ancestors desired to find a place to build free and strong States where such ignoble sentiments as bigotry could not survive.

I do not forget that the splendid domain of Arizona, one of the imperial States of this Union, came into being largely through the brave exploits of the Mormon people. When Gen. Stephen Kearney was beleaguered near San Diego during the Mexican War, and it seemed as though the Mexicans were going to capture and annihilate him and his entire command, it was the Mormon battalion that marched all the long way from Iowa into Tucson, Ariz., and occupied in then Mexican territory a domain we now know as the Gadsden Purchase, which was purchased by our Government in 1854. When the commanding officer of the Mormon battalion, Lt. Col. St. George Cooke, entered the then Mexican town of Tucson and raised the American flag, he issued a pronunciamento, as follows:

"We do not war upon civilians. We make war against men in uniform only. The property of individuals will be held sacred. All civil rights will be upheld. Those who obey the law and conform to order will be protected."

The command remained there some days to refresh itself and then marched on to the relief of General Kearney who, as I said, was beleaguered and surrounded near San Diego.

So, Mr. President, the Mormon people, as pioneers, as State builders, as statesmen, as people of industry and patriotism in every department of life, compare well and favorably with the general mass of their fellow citizens. This much I should have said; more than this I need not say.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1940.

Mr. FREDERIC E. FOX,
Flagstaff, Ariz.

DEAR MR. FOX: Your letter of January 15 received, advising that you are compiling a history of the five Babbitt brothers.

It is now more than 53 years since I first met the Babbitt brothers—David, George, Charles, William, and Edward. Within a short time after they settled in northern Arizona they, severally, established character as forward-looking, courageous, reliable citizens, and down through the years they contributed toward the upbuilding and the dramatic progress of Arizona.

When I was trying to earn $20 per month as a cowboy (I was overpaid) I rode scores of days and many hundreds of miles under the summer sun and winter stars with Bill Babbitt. Bill was a clean-spoken, chivalrous cowhand.

The thundering herd would sometimes stampede, and this caused some cowhands to let out profanity as they rode furiously and hard, but Bill was serene, and silent as he rode, and let out no profanity, even of the low, sweet, soft kind.

When the chuck wagon would break down or get lost, or the camp cook would turn cranky and there was nothing for supper but "wind pudding," Bill was patient and pleasant and endured all hardships with an almost royal humor.

Some years ago Bill went to that vast realm where kings and queens are probably counted as deuces and the American cowboys are probably counted as aces.

With kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

THE F. B. I.

[Remarks of Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona, in the Senate of the United States, Thursday, April 25, 1940]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the speeches just delivered in the Senate regarding the F. B. I. are timely and pertinent.

Charging the able senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with attempting to smear somebody is about like charging Abe Lincoln with engaging in a similar endeavor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. When Abraham Lincoln lived he was charged with that and everything else imaginable in the category of crime and ridicule.

Mr. ASHURST. No one believed it.

Mr. NORRIS. They do not now; they know better now; but many believed it then.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, no one believed it then.

Mr. President, it is not my function, certainly not my duty, to make any elaborate defense of the F. B. I. or of the Department of Justice. Some 1,600 men make up the personnel of the F. B. I. It would be impossible to imagine that out of 1,600 men there could be no weak member, no rotten bough. The greatest Wisdom, the greatest Mind, the greatest Good on earth, in choosing a cabinet found that He had a denying Peter, a doubting Thomas, and a bribe-taking Judas. Finite man will labor in vain to select men in large numbers without finding some weak one. Therefore, I do not doubt that out of 1,600 men there may be, and doubtless is, some unworthy man.

I speak now as a whole regarding the work of the F. B. I. I shall not even refer to the Detroit cases, because it is my habit never to discuss a matter pending in the courts. It was wise on the part of the speakers who preceded me not to descend into the details of those cases. It is proper in such circumstances to stand in awe of justice and let justice speak.

The members of the F. B. I.—that is, the Federal Bureau of Investigation—are trained men. In my service as a Senator I have made but one recommendation to the F. B. I. I did recommend that a young gentleman be appointed. He was given an examination and could not pass. I requested a reexamination. Still he did not pass. So, far from feeling any resentment against Mr. Hoover, I admire him rather for the strong and sterling way in which he disregarded what might be called a political endorsement.

The F. B. I. requires men of unusual types, sagacious, prudent; they must know when to speak and when to withhold speech. They must know what a criminal would do in certain circumstances. They must even know who would be likely to commit a crime of a particular nature. They must be trained to know what a suspected person will do in certain circumstances. In order to be a successful member of the force of the F. B. I., one must understand physics—that is, natural philosophy; one must understand psychology—that is, the science of human emotions—to an almost perfect degree.

The persons against whom the F. B. I. agents are operating constitute some of the boldest, most desperate, most cruel, and inveterate criminals ever known. Such criminally disposed or antisocial persons desire sensations, wines, high-powered cars, bright lights, ease, comfort, luxury, but lack the ability to earn these things. Therefore they seek to take them by indirection and in violation of the law.

As to communism, I suppose one has a right, under our Constitution, to preach communism. Communism cannot prevail, because it is contrary to the inborn, ineradicable sentiments of the human heart. Deep in the human instincts and enshrined in the hearts of all humans are three things that may not be repealed by any government or any law:

Something to possess. That desire cannot be repealed. Therefore communism will fail because it cannot wipe out the desire to possess something tangible; some property.

Something in which to believe.

Someone for whom to care.

These three things are invincible, and communism will attempt in vain to repeal them. They are part of human life and human destiny.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] opened the debate. I listened to him with care, as I listened, of course, with care to what was said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. I agree with them that a man charged with murder or any other crime should be tried strictly according to law. The only hope we have of maintaining this Government is to assure the accused person, no matter how lowly, how poor, how despised such person may be, that he will be tried by the same system of government, the same law, the same rule of evidence, and possibly by the same judge and the same system of jury selection under which the wealthiest, most eminent, most learned citizen would be tried.

Mr. President, more than a hundred years ago—yes; longer ago than that—an eminent orator—I leave it to some surer scholar to discover whom it was—said:

"If all the men who have fallen under American justice and have suffered the death penalty in America could be resurrected at the foot of the gallows and, after their resurrection, were to form a government, they would form a government of the same kind as the one under whose justice they fell."

There is no doubt about that, because it is the fairest system ever devised by man. Therefore, of course, it behooves us all to see to it that the civil liberty of citizens shall not be swept away, and that the lowliest and poorest citizen, the most meager in funds, shall be tried by the same law as the most opulent citizen.

It is a singular circumstance which, if it were not so poignant in its tragedy, would be ironical to the point of humor that when a cold-blooded, desperate, cruel, and inveterate gangster is arrested after spending a lifetime inveighing against the Constitution of the United States, after spending much of his ill-gotten gains in an attempt to subvert our system of government, the first thing that gangster does when brought into court is to appeal to this very Constitution for the preservation of his own liberty and for a fair trial. Sirs, the document he tried to destroy, the system against which he inveighed, and against which he bored from within, is the system to which in his day of trial and trouble he appeals for his freedom and his acquittal, if he is to have such. That statement shows the strength, the power, the beneficence, and the justice of the American system of government under our Constitution.

As to Mr. Hoover, let me say that he is a young man. So far as I know, he is a good man. He is not a great man, for no man is ever great until he has had much sorrow, humiliation, and disappointment. No man will be great, or can expect to be great, until he has had full measure of those chastening and refining influences. But measuring Mr. Hoover by his accomplishments—of course, he is not without error—measuring him by what has been done, the record seems good.

When Mr. Cummings was appointed Attorney General in 1933, I happen to know that tremendous pressure was brought to bear upon him to try to induce him not to retain Mr. Hoover as the Chief of the F. B. I. Mr. Cummings made an investigation, which lasted nearly a year, and at the conclusion of the investigation made by Mr. Cummings he determined—and I think wisely determined—to retain Mr. Hoover.

When Mr. Murphy succeeded Mr. Cummings, the same pressure was not brought to bear on Attorney General Murphy to release and discharge Mr. Hoover, but there was some opinion that it should be done. Attorney General Murphy retained Mr. Hoover as Chief of the F. B. I.

When Mr. Jackson succeeded Mr. Murphy as Attorney General—I do not now speak with authenticity or with any real degree of accuracy—he considered the question, and after his investigation he also retained Mr. Hoover as the Director of the F. B. I.

It would be childlike in simplicity to pretend that in such a wide field, a field so pregnant with possibilities for mistakes, no mistake has been made. Whenever you find a public man who has made no mistakes you will find one who has been asleep. I say to my fellow Senators, when they go out into the field to begin their campaigns for reelection they will be charged with having made mistakes. Admit it, certainly, for it shows that you are active; you are trying to do something. Those in the graveyard and those who are asleep probably make no mistakes. I have no doubt, Mr. Hoover has made mistakes. I hope he has not made as many as I have made; but it should not frighten one to be accused of having made a mistake.

Mr. President, again referring to the men required in the F. B. I., some Senators may have a phonographic brain. I congratulate them if they have. It is not, however, conclusive evidence of mental strength to have a phonographic brain, one which can reproduce like a phonograph. While it happens to be no sure evidence of mental strength, the F. B. I. man must have it.

How many Senators have a photographic eye? I congratulate such as have. With the photographic eye, what you see in a flash is engraved on your mind forever. If you have such an eye, you are a remarkable man. The F. B. I. man must have both a photographic eye and a phonographic brain.

The F. B. I. man must be cool. He must be so deliberate and so cool that he even appears to be like a gangster in temperament. Gangsters are the coolest of all men. There is no excitement about them. The first thing they learn about gangster warfare is to keep cool. A false move and the game is over.

Mr. President, these men in the F. B. I., moreover, must be above reproach. They must have no social ambition; they must have no political ambition; and, above all, they must have no financial ambition. It is not easy to find men, certainly regiments of men, who can meet such a test, and that is the test they must meet, otherwise the inexorable law of efficiency soon will exclude them from their positions in the F. B. I.

As for Mr. Hoover, I have never had sip or sup with him. We are not social, fraternal, political companions or comrades, and when I speak of him, as I have done before, I do it because I believe I would exhibit a sort of cowardice, I would certainly exhibit a sort of timidity, if I did not lay before the Senate and the country these observations concerning impressions of the F. B. I. which have come to me down through the years.

I could tire the Senate by a long and detailed account of hundreds of cases which have been solved by the F. B. I., cases so startling in their nature, so remarkable, that one might imagine that the F. B. I. men themselves were endowed with some sort of telepathic sense, so remarkable and so startling have been their achievements.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no unfinished business now pending.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not desired that the Senate take up the calendar at this time; and in view of the absence of a large number of Senators, I wish to say that, by agreement with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the nominations of Mr. Knox and Mr. Stimson will not be taken up until next Monday. I make that announcement so that Members may be governed accordingly. My information is that the Committee on Naval Affairs has just voted to report favorably the nomination of Mr. Knox.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does not the Senator think we ought to be prompt about our action on these nominations, one way or the other, in view of the prevailing emergency, and the fact that these nominations are for the heads of the War and Navy Departments, respectively?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am perfectly willing to act now, so far as I am concerned; but it has been suggested that a large number of Senators are absent.

Mr. CONNALLY. A large number of Senators ought to be here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator will understand that when we recessed over the Republican convention there was a gentleman's understanding that no business of any importance would be taken up during the week. I try to carry out such understandings, though probably they ought not to be entered into.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me that we have been reminded and we have proclaimed that there is an emergency. These gentlemen are nominated to be the head of the Army and the head of the Navy, and we sit around here and wait a week merely because somebody is absent.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee waited a week before they took up the nominations. I suppose the Senate may be excused for waiting 3 or 4 days.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I merely wish to add that I am very happy over the decision of the able Senator from Kentucky. A number of Senators are absent, as they naturally would be on account of the Fourth of July. In anticipation of their absence I personally said to a great many of them that I was sure there would be no transaction of business this week.

I do not know of any great emergency calling for immediate action on the nominations of these able gentlemen. A postponement until Monday is not an undue delay; and I hope the Senator from Texas does not feel disturbed on that account.

What I rose to say was that next week, about the end of the week or a little after the middle of the week, I assume some of the Members of the Senate will want to travel to Chicago. I have been asked many times if we would have sessions during the whole of the week. I desire to suggest that probably it would be accommodating to the Members of the Senate who want to go to Chicago to attend the Democratic convention, if the Senate could recess about Thursday, or not later than Friday, in order that they may be there in time.

If we could come to more or less of an understanding on the subject now, it would be very much to the delight and convenience of Members of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. I think more time would necessarily be required than in the case of the Republican convention, because the distance to Chicago is greater than it is to Philadelphia.

Mr. MCNARY. Yes; that is what I had in mind.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we might well understand that about Thursday we shall undertake to recess or adjourn for a period sufficiently long to enable the Chicago convention to nominate the next President of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I assume that on Monday we shall take up for consideration the nominations of Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox, and that disposition will be made of them at that time.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, such an arrangement wholly conforms to my view and my pleasure. I think we should have one further understanding in the matter. Shall we meet 2 weeks from next Monday or shall we meet on the following Tuesday or Wednesday?

Mr. BARKLEY. We can determine that matter a little later. I am not prepared now to say.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the understanding, then, that these nominations will be taken up next Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Monday; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I certainly hope they will be, because it seems that the Navy Department and the War Department ought to be quickly staffed. We ought to put them to work.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think most of the departments are at work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS TO SUBMIT REPORTS

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs be authorized to submit reports during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session. I thought the committee would be ready to report the nomination of Mr. Knox before the taking of a recess by the Senate today, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] informs me that the committee will not be able to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the Committee on Naval Affairs be authorized to submit reports during the recess or adjournment of the Senate? The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POST-OFFICE NOMINATION RECOMMITTED

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Harley G. Moorhead, recommended for appointment as postmaster at Omaha, Nebr., the first nomination on page 3 of the calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of all the other postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the remaining post-office nominations are confirmed en bloc.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Kentucky that my inquiry a moment ago about action on these nominations was not prompted by any pique or any desire to inconvenience absent Senators. My position is that we ought to stay here and attend to the public business. The country wants us to stay here and attend to these matters. These nominations either ought to be acted upon favorably or they ought to be rejected; and it ought to be done now, and not at some other time.

I think if we have nothing else to do we might go ahead with the revision of the tax laws. We are going to have to revise and reconstruct our tax laws, and we ought to do it now, while the people are willing. Six months from now they will have a different attitude toward this whole program.

I shall not object, because it would not do any good to object; but the country want us to stay here, and they are much more concerned with what we do here than with what we do somewhere else. If some Senators want to be absent, let them be excused and let us go ahead. Senators are elected to do business here, in this Chamber, and they ought to be here. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a violation of the rules of the Senate for the occupants of the galleries to manifest approval or disapproval. The Chair may add that while it is the duty of Senators to be here, it is not the duty of the citizenship of the country to interfere with the Senate by applauding in the galleries.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Stimson has been reported only today. It could not be taken up today, except by unanimous consent, as every Member of the Senate knows. Tomorrow will be the Fourth of July, and it has been immemorially the custom of the Senate to adjourn over the Fourth of July. So the nomination could not be taken up before Friday at the earliest.

The nomination of Mr. Knox has not even been reported to the Senate, and it could not be reported, except as I have gotten unanimous consent, until Friday, and it could not be taken up then except by unanimous consent. So that the delay in considering these two nominations from Friday until Monday I trust will not seriously interfere with the Navy and War Departments and will not cause our defense program to collapse entirely.

NOMINATION OF FRANK KNOX—REPORT OF NAVAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. LUCAS subsequently, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, under authority previously granted on request of Mr. BARKLEY, reported favorably the nomination of Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, July 5, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Light of God, fall on life's common ways where human lives are thronging in toil and weakness. Let understanding and courage come with the realization that religion is an experience of comfort, rest, and security; thus can discontent be driven out and the shadows of the future lifted; impress us that physical ease is not civilization. Inspire our people to take the Sermon on the Mount and translate its principles of honesty, purity, and unselfishness into good citizenship. Under God let the world of strife be shut out and the brotherhood of man shut in. O Master of the lonely way, show this drooping, bleeding world anew the wonders that make men free. Deepen in us the most earnest concern for peace, for suffering humanity, and for a passion for human freedom and for social justice. O crown us with conviction and not bigotry, with self-respect and not vanity, and with meekness and power. We pray that our strength may be as the strength of ten because our hearts are pure. Grant that any burdened one may bear patiently the cross of grief and pain. Let come the wisdom and the peace of God to dwell with our Speaker and the Congress. In the name of our ever-living Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time in order to make a unanimous-consent request and to make an explanation.

It is the idea that when we adjourn today we will adjourn until tomorrow and before I take my seat I will make a unanimous-consent request that when we adjourn tomorrow we adjourn to meet on Monday next.

I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] desires to interrogate me.

Mr. REED of New York. I suggest that, for the benefit of those present who may have plans for over the week end, we might have some idea of the status of affairs for the coming week.

Mr. RAYBURN. For next week, of course, Monday is District of Columbia day. I do not know whether they have any legislation or not. When they get through, then the so-called Mexican claims bill will be taken up for completion. I think there remain 30 minutes of general debate on that bill, and then we will proceed to dispose of it.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] informs me that they must come back for a separate vote on the so-called Mundt amendment to the stream-pollution bill. A great many Members—and I say this to both sides of the House—are talking to me about the Commodity Credit Corporation bill, or an increase in their power. Yesterday when the roll was called 273 Members answered. That is more than 150 Members short of the complete membership. I doubt very seriously, I will say to those who are interested in that matter, if it would be a wise thing to bring it up next week. I might say that when the minority leader was here and before we adjourned he and I spoke about the adjournment for next week over the Democratic convention. As I remember it, we were talking about adjourning on Thursday over to the following Monday week. Of course, that makes a very short week if we do that. There is another thing that is important, and this has not yet been determined, and I know a great many Members are tremendously interested in it. The people who have in charge the so-called Hatch bill have been very fine in not insisting on calling it up suddenly, but before we had the adjournment for the Republican convention it was tentatively agreed that it would come up next week. Whether or not, with 250 or 235 Members present, those in charge of that bill will want to call it up I do not know. I am committed to allow it to come up next week if they insist. However, I think it would be the better part of judgment if they allowed it to go over until after the convention, when the Members will be here.

Now, that is all I know of that may come up next week.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. My understanding was that the Hatch bill was to come up on next Tuesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. That has been the hope.

Mr. MICHENER. Then unless other arrangements are made, it will be called up on Tuesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; but I may say this: Unless we get through with the Mexican claims bill in time to take up Judge Mansfield's matter, which will be a question of only 1 hour if all the time is used, I would like to bring that up first on Tuesday. If it is insisted upon, I am willing for the Hatch bill to follow that.

Mr. MICHENER. As far as I am concerned, there are a great number on this side who are absent because there is nothing to do here. If the Hatch bill is to come up on Tuesday, they will be here and we would like an opportunity to notify them.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman that by tomorrow, I hope, and certainly by Friday, it can be definitely determined whether the Hatch bill is coming up and the office of each Member will be notified if it is.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There will be no effort made to adjourn Congress, will there?

Mr. RAYBURN. There will be an effort made to adjourn Congress over the Democratic convention the same as we did over the Republican convention.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But not to adjourn permanently, not a sine die adjournment?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been home for 5 days, looked at my cattle, and looked over my crops. I am perfectly resigned to stay. I can warm this chair leather just as long as anybody and be perfectly satisfied about it. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is a great international crisis and we should not adjourn sine die.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

NO LYNCHINGS IN AMERICA

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, in this dark hour in the world's destiny, when the dogs of war are snarling, barking, or biting in almost every nation on earth, there is one and only one preeminent consideration in every mind—preparation for peace by national defense.

But I do not think it amiss to mention with pride, joy, and gratitude to Providence a victory upon another fighting front, in the war against crime.

There has been no lynching in the United States in 1940. The last lynching was on April 1, 1939. Four hundred and fifty-eight days have come and gone since then, without mob violence. Four hundred and fifty-eight victory days. [Applause.]

Every Member of Congress, I am sure, feels as I do, that this achievement should be noted, not in self-satisfaction and restful complacency, but as a challenge to renewed and increased effort to keep our national escutcheon permanently clean of the stain of mob murder. [Applause.]

This fact is also certified in humble gratitude to Almighty God for His inspiration and leadership in this conquering struggle for righteousness.

We cannot be too oft reminded that lynching is, as it should be—definitely on the way out. In the first year for which accurate records were kept—1892—there were 231 persons lynched in the United States. In 1939 there was one. And he was a white man. I know that some authorities charge that there were three, but I have investigated each one of these three alleged lynchings and solemnly certify that there is no evidence to substantiate the charge in two of the three cases. In my speech on this floor on January 10, 1940, I gave the unvarnished facts. Suffice it to say now that one was a murder committed by two men. Every so-called antilynching bill has defined lynching as killing by a mob composed of three or more persons. Murder by two men is not lynching. In another of the three cases a body, long dead, was found. There was no evidence whatsoever of any mob violence. It may or may not have been a lynching. The third case unquestionably was a lynching by a mob composed of four or five men. The victim was white. But whether there was one or two or three lynchings in 1939, the record proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that this crime is being utterly eradicated. It is being eradicated by the only force that can eradicate it, namely, enlightened local influence. Local self-government has wrought this miracle.

It seems to me that even in times like these, when civilization is almost forgotten, when humanity is drowning in a sea of blood, and when every exertion should be bent toward keeping the gates of wrath from closing the way of hope, this record of achievement is worthy of the attention of Congress.

God bless America, and every effort that is being made to make her a better land in which to live.

God bless America, and rededicate us all, with renewed zeal and high hope, to the continuing fight for peace in America, as well as for America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. MITCHELL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in three particulars: First, to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered by me over the radio on democracy and defense; second, to include my minority report on the bill H. R. 5939; and third, to extend my remarks by including a statement entitled "The Record Closes" by Ralph F. Burkheart. I am informed by the Government Printing Office that this will take 1¾ pages at a cost of $79.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two particulars.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a graduation address I made a number of years ago on the subject of universal empire.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein three short tables from the Bureau of the Census, the Census of Manufactures, and the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise for a double purpose: First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a survey of the historical work done by the W. P. A. in America; and, secondly, I desire to extend my remarks by including therein a speech by the Honorable Charles G. Binderup on the subject Will Democracy Survive?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Phillip D. Reed, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., before the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today after the disposition of the special order that has been heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from a Grafton (W. Va.) newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today following the address by the gentleman from California [Mr. DONDERO].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has been considering this morning the Burke-Wadsworth bill providing for compulsory military training and a selective draft for that purpose. If I may do so, I would like to direct the attention of the Members of the House to the thought that it may be advisable to include in either that bill, if possible, or in a companion bill, a means of providing a moratorium for the benefit of those who are going to be included in that training program. Many of these people are purchasing homes or are aiding their parents in the purchase of homes and they may have other indebtednesses which can hardly be supported by the proposed pay of $5 a month. I suggest that those who are in charge of this legislation give that matter earnest consideration in order to alleviate a very serious condition which may arise among those who may be so drafted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of business in order for the day and after any other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two editorials from local papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, it is with poignant grief that I was absent yesterday afternoon and failed to listen to the language of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] when he traveled the labyrinthian maze of sequipedalian verbiage to an unknown destination.

It reminds me of the story of a Negro in Tupelo, Miss., who was going home one stormy night with a slab of white meat and a sack of hominy grits. There was much thunder and very little lightning. So he got off his mule, got down on his marrow bones, and he said, "O God, if it is all the same to you, give me more light and less noise." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore entered for today, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF IDAHO INTO THE UNION

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago today, on July 3, 1890, President Harrison signed the bill providing for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union, adding a forty-third star to our flag. The Territory of Idaho had been created by act of Congress March 3, 1863.

Last evening I read with much interest the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of 50 years ago containing accounts of the discussions and debates incident to consideration of the statehood bills in both House and Senate. The Territory's population at that time was about 90,000, and a question was raised by some congressional opponents over provisions of the State constitution which had been adopted in November of 1889 relating to requirements for qualified electors.

The Honorable Fred T. Dubois, then Territorial Delegate from Idaho, after making an impressive presentation of factual information, declared:

> Idaho, in its material embodiment, is large enough, rich enough, and prolific enough to serve as a theater for the activities of a great American community for more centuries than mortal beings are warranted to think or dream about. Partly by her common inheritance in the beneficent forces of nature and partly by a bountiful endowment all her own, she is able to tender to the custodians of the national welfare every reasonable guaranty and prospect that she will be no laggard in the never-ceasing onward race.

The citizens of the Gem State today are celebrating this golden anniversary of statehood with pride in the achievements of those sturdy pioneers who gave us a heritage of true Americanism. Their inspiration has made it possible to keep faith with that pledge to the Union made 50 years ago.

Today Idaho has a population of about 565,000, but it has attained high rank by virtue of its rich mineral, timber, and agricultural resources. More recently there has been recognition of the importance of the vast recreational possibilities of her majestic mountains and streams, as well as her highly desirable climate, and increasing numbers of Americans annually visit this wonderland.

These material resources are essential, but far more valuable is the intelligent application of our human resources. The pioneers of a half century ago displayed vision and resourcefulness in laying the groundwork of a great Commonwealth. Considerable progress has been recorded, but much remains to be done in the wise utilization of our resources and in promoting the welfare of our citizens. The challenge to this and subsequent generations is to discharge their responsibilities of citizenship, to forge ahead to greater accomplishments, and to add luster to their legacy.

Today I have arranged to have a flag flown over the Capitol at Washington in commemoration of 50 years of statehood for Idaho and in tribute to those valiant Americans who made possible Idaho's admission into the Union. [Applause.]

VACATING PROCEEDINGS BY WHICH BILL PASSED

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the bill S. 3926 passed the House yesterday be vacated and that further action on the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement made by one Wendell L. Willkie in Fortune Magazine of April 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me on the Wagner Act and the amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a telegram and several excerpts from letters, congressional hearings, and judicial opinions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PATENTS FOR LANDS HELD UNDER COLOR OF TITLE—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 863)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 7736, entitled "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title."

The proposed legislation directs the Secretary of the Interior, upon payment of $1.25 per acre, to issue patents to public lands in Monroe County, Mich., which have been held in good faith and in peaceable, adverse possession by citizens of the United States and their ancestors or grantors for more than 20 years.

The Department of the Interior has advised me that the lands which would be affected by this legislation, if approved, are prospectively valuable for oil and gas. The proposed legislation does not provide for a reservation to the United States of the mineral deposits in the lands.

While the long-continued occupancy of these lands entitles the claimants to equitable consideration, I do not think the United States should issue patents to the lands, except with a reservation to it of the oil and gas and other mineral deposits therein, together with the right to prospect for, mine and remove the same, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 3, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable, indeed, that the President felt called upon to veto this bill. The equities are all with those few individuals, residents of Monroe County, Mich., who, through no fault of their own, will be called upon to pay toll because of an arbitrary general law which was never intended to apply to their lands.

I am a thorough believer in conservation and reserving to the Government its natural resources. This proposed law, however, does not conflict with this theory. I have not had an opportunity to study the reasons for the veto. However, the veto message just read indicates that there may be oil or minerals underlying the few acres of land in Monroe County covered by this bill. This is a possibility, and not a probability. Be that as it may, the Government presumed that it had patented these lands the same as the rest of Monroe County. If a few acres here and there, through technical mistake, were not formally conveyed to the occupants and owners, it does not seem right or just that the present occupants of these small parcels of land, sprinkled over several townships, should be prevented from ever acquiring title to their land. If the President's veto is adhered to, it will mean that the owners of these lost lands will never be able to acquire complete title. For instance, a farmer owns 100 acres of land in Monroe County. Possibly in the center of the farm somewhere, 2 or 3 acres have never been patented by the Government to the farmer or his predecessors. Therefore, there is no way whereby that farmer can ever completely own this small patch in the middle of his own farm. This affects his title, makes it impossible for him to give clear title to his farm, and makes it impossible for him to mortgage his farm to a Government loaning agency, for the sole reason that he cannot show perfect title from the Government.

I feel sure if the Members of the House and Senate could devote the time to this matter, and understood it as I understand it, the bill would be passed over the veto. However, I realize this is a small matter, not of national importance. I appreciate that it is practically impossible to pass a bill of this kind over the President's veto. In these circumstances, there is not much left to be done about it. The bill will go back to the committee and that ends the matter.

I shall, however, introduce a new bill, reserving the oil and mineral rights, as required in the veto message, and I hope that the bill so amended will meet with the approval of the President.

We must not forget that after consideration the Public Lands Committee of the House favorably reported the bill unanimously; that the House passed the bill unanimously; that the Senate Public Lands Committee favorably reported the bill unanimously; and that the Senate, after an explanation of the bill on the floor of the Senate, passed the bill unanimously. The objection raised by the President was not suggested by the representatives of the Department of the Interior either to the Public Lands Committee of the House or the like committee of the Senate.

By virtue of the privilege granted to me, I include herein excerpts from the report of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House:

More than 100 years ago Monroe County, Mich., was settled largely by the French. At the time of this settlement the Federal Government owned the land in Monroe County. These settlers, following the French custom, staked out their claims along the water fronts—either lake or stream. The claims were but a few rods wide on the water front and extended back, some of them, as far as 1½ miles, so that the settler's claim was a very narrow strip of land varying in depth up to 1½ miles and more.

In 1819 the Government surveyed much of this territory into townships and sections. These French claimants were already living on their claims and in possession of these long, narrow strips of land running back from the several water fronts in the county.

Congress granted to the owners of these front tracts a donation of an additional 40 arpents (about 1½ miles) in depth, upon submitting proof of their ownership of the front tracts and otherwise complying with the law.

A few of the then owners who were entitled to such benefits took possession of the land, but failed to submit the required proofs; that is, these original settlers neglected to do that which would perfect their title to this additional land.

The present occupants of these lands and their predecessors in title openly claimed and believed said lands to be their own. By reason of this failure to file said proof more than 100 years ago, there still remain small pieces and narrow strips of land throughout Monroe County—remnants of these old French claims—for which strips the Federal Government has apparently never issued patents. The boundaries and descriptions of these French claims have long since been abandoned and the township and section descriptions, as provided by the Government survey in 1819, are now followed in describing lands in Monroe County.

Abstractors' and county surveyors' maps were submitted to the committee indicating that there were at least 13 small pieces or parcels of this "lost land" in said county for which no patent has ever been issued by the Government. Some of these small pieces of land are right in the middle of a farm for the remainder of which the Government issued patents years ago.

The people of Monroe County are not migratory, and much of the county is still occupied by many of the descendants of these original French settlers. These people have lived on the land, improved it, paid the taxes, and believed that they had perfect title to the land down through generations.

In 1928, in preparing abstracts of title to land in the county, the above condition was first discovered. The Federal Government had parted with title to all so-called public lands in Michigan many years ago and in 1928 did not know that this unpatented land existed in Monroe County until the matter was called to the Government's attention by the Monroe County abstractors.

As a result of this condition, on February 16, 1929 (45 Stat. 1188), the Congress enacted a law providing for the issuance of patents on these lands in Michigan held under color of title. This law expired 5 years after its enactment.

At the time of the enactment of this law there was on the statute books the act of December 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 1069), providing for the sale of public lands that had been held under color of title, etc.

The bill H. R. 7736 is an exact copy of the act of February 16, 1929, and the only purpose of the bill is to extend the privileges granted under said act for an additional period of 5 years.

The act of February 16, 1929, was drafted in the Land Commissioner's Office in the Department of the Interior for the specific purpose of doing justice to these Michigan farmers.

* * * * * * *

Owners of land in Monroe County who attempted to mortgage their land to the Government, or sell it and guarantee perfect title, took advantage of the act of February 16, 1929, during the 5 years it was in force. Other landowners who had no occasion to investigate the title to the land—which they presumed they owned—did not get the benefits of the act of February 16, 1929. The proof before the committee was to the effect that these landowners who had occupied and cultivated this land for generations could not be convinced that they did not own the land and, therefore, that this was one of the reasons why all of them did not come in under the law and pay $1.25 an acre and the cost of making the showing to the Department of the Interior required by the law.

The committee was advised by a representative of the Department of the Interior that 5 persons have made application to secure patents to their land and in compliance with the instructions of the Department have filed application under the act of December 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 1069). Only one of these cases has reached the point of final decision before the Department. That is the case of Mrs. Anna Nickel (G. L. O. 07054) a widow, who is the owner, as she presumed, of 54.58 acres of land, her title originating in these French claims and for which no patent has ever been issued by the Government. Mrs. Nickel complied with the act of December 22, 1928, in every particular and pursued the course laid down by the Interior Department to a conclusion. The Department of the Interior under date of November 4, 1939, advised the attorney for Mrs. Nickel fully in the premises and concluded as follows:

"From the evidence presented it is believed that the applicant has made a sufficient showing to entitle her to a preference right to purchase the land applied for under the act of December 22, 1928. The lots have been appraised at the rate of $30 per acre, making a total appraised price for the two lots of $1,641.60.

"The applicant is hereby allowed 30 days from receipt of notice hereof within which to deposit the price of the land in this office, failing in which, or of other action or appeal, she will forfeit her right to the land under this application."

It will be observed that the Department ordered this woman to pay $1,641.60 to the Government within 30 days, or be foreclosed from even taking advantage of the act of December 22, 1928. The Department, however, has considerately granted a stay to Mrs. Nickel pending the outcome of this proposed legislation.

In these circumstances the Representative in Congress from the district in which this land is situated appealed to the Department of the Interior and, after conferences with the Department, introduced the bill H. R. 7736.

* * * * * * *

Hearings were held before the committee and a representative from the Department appeared and explained the position of the Department.

The committee is of the opinion that the bill should be enacted because:

1. The Federal Government is not asserting title to these "lost lands" to be affected by this legislation.

2. These small tracts of land dotting different farms throughout Monroe County are parts of parcels that have been claimed, occupied, improved, and on which the present occupants and their predecessors in title have paid taxes for more than 100 years. In short, these occupants presumed that they were the owners of said lands during all this time and in this belief the Government apparently supported them, or at least in no way questioned their title.

3. The apparent cause of the present title difficulty is undoubtedly due to an oversight on the part of the original claimants in that they failed to properly describe the land assigned to them by the Government and to file the formal proof in the proper land office and this, more than 100 years ago.

4. It would seem inequitable and unjust to compel occupants of the land like the widow Nickels to pay $30 an acre at this time in order to secure patents from the Government.

5. The act of December 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 1069), referred to in the recent letter from the Department of the Interior contemplates the purchase from the Government of land throughout the United States where the conditions are such, and the equities are such, that a present appraisement of the land will do justice to the Government and to the citizen.

6. The enactment of this law follows a precedent rather than establishing one. As a practical matter this bill places upon the statute books no new law, but does revive the act of February 16, 1929, for a period of 5 years.

It seems to me that the committee's position is sound, and justice requires that the relief provided in this proposed law should be given. This veto message is most unfortunate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF ACT OF 1930—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 864)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6328, to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)).

The bill under consideration involves two separate subjects.

The first proposal is that paragraph 1529 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938, be further amended by inserting "1022" after the figure "1006." This would, in effect, restore to certain mats of cocoa fiber the classification for duty purposes which they were given until a recent court decision holding otherwise, and I have no objection to this proposal.

The second proposal is that no duties collected prior to June 26, 1938, under paragraph 1115 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall be refunded, unless the claimant establishes that he bore the burden of such duties. No reason appears discernible why one small group of claims should be singled out for the imposition of such a requirement when no such condition is exacted from claimants for refund of duties erroneously paid under any other paragraph of the Tariff Act. Moreover, the fixing of June 26, 1938, as the date back of which duties collected could not be refunded would result in discrimination as between shippers of the same commodities covered by this paragraph.

Since the effect of this proposal would be to introduce a palpable inequality of treatment as between claimants against the Government, I am impelled to disapprove the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 3, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADOLPH ERNEST HELMS—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 868)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, the bill (H. R. 5156) for the relief of Adolph Ernest Helms.

This legislation would cancel pending deportation proceedings against Adolph Ernest Helms, a citizen and native of Germany, and admit him to permanent residence in the United States but would expressly provide that he may not become a naturalized citizen unless and until he leaves the United States and reenters in a lawful way.

This legislation is anomalous and different in its provisions from other bills of this type. It seems highly questionable whether a person who is to be considered ineligible to become a citizen of the United States, should, nevertheless, be admitted to permanent residence in this country. If a person is to be so admitted, he should be permitted to apply for naturalization if he so desires. If he is not regarded as a fit subject for naturalization, no reason is discernible why he should be admitted to permanent residence.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I am unable to approve this legislation in its present form.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered printed.

SALOMON GEORG KAUFMAN—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 865)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, the bill H. R. 7563, which would provide that Salomon Georg Kaufman and his wife, formerly of Germany, and their child, a native of the Netherlands, shall be admitted to the United States for permanent residence, notwithstanding any provision of the immigration laws.

It will be observed that, unlike some other bills of this class, it does more than merely waive the requirements of the Quota Act but would also set aside the limitations of all immigration statutes in respect to this alien and his family. It does not seem to me to be advisable to grant an exception of such a broad scope in an instance, as is the case here, in which the proper administrative authorities have not had an opportunity to determine as to whether any member of this family would be barred by any substantive provision of the immigration laws other than the Quota Act.

In the light of these considerations, I find myself unable to approve this legislation in its present form.

C. B. REAGH—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 867)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2513, for the relief of C. B. Reagh.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay the sum of $500 to C. B. Reagh, of Belden, Miss., in settlement of his claims against the United States for losses sustained on account of personal injuries received by his minor son, Robert Reagh, when he was struck, on May 6, 1937, by a motor vehicle in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The record in this case indicates that, upon careful investigation by the War Department, it has determined that there was no negligence whatever on the part of the operator of the Government vehicle. The payment proposed, therefore, would be in the nature of a pure gratuity on the part of the Government.

LESTER R. TAYLOR—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 869)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 1178, for the relief of Lester R. Taylor.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay to Lester R. Taylor, of Sturgis, S. Dak., the sum of $792.68 in settlement of his claims against the United States for injuries, hospital care, and other expenses suffered and incurred when his son, Jerry Taylor, a minor, was struck by a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps on June 14, 1937.

The record in this case indicates that, upon careful investigation by the War Department, it has determined that there was no negligence whatever on the part of the operator of the Government vehicle. The payment proposed, therefore, would be in the nature of a pure gratuity on the part of the Government.

ANTHONY BORSELLINO—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 866)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6845, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $3,500 to Anthony Borsellino, Washington, D. C., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of his minor son, Joseph Borsellino, as a result of injuries received through the negligent operation of a truck belonging to the District of Columbia National Guard on June 23, 1933, at Third Street and Maine Avenue, Washington, D. C.

The truck in question was at the time of the accident in the custody of and under the control and operation of agents of the District of Columbia National Guard, and was on a mission directly connected with the business thereof, and not under the supervision of any agency of the War Department or on any mission connected with the business of the United States. In situations of this character affecting equipment issued to the National Guard of the several States it has been the general rule that claims for damages or for injuries incident to the equipment loaned to the several States are not proper charges against the funds of the United States but rather the responsibility of the individual States. Under this rule the District of Columbia National Guard would have the same status as any State National Guard.

Congress has recognized this principle by providing for the annual maintenance of the National Guard of the District of Columbia out of funds of the District.

While I do not feel justified in giving my approval to the legisation in its present form, I understand that the claim is a meritorious one, and I would have no objection, therefore, to legislation that would provide for its payment from District funds.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE FOURTH OF JULY

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is to be a Fourth of July speech. I am afraid we have been getting out of the habit of remembering that there was a document known as the Declaration of Independence with which, and upon which, as a cornerstone, we began our national existence. I think that the most significant things we do in these later years upon the anniversary of the day that gave us freedom more than a century and a half ago is to shoot off skyrockets and Chinese firecrackers. We have almost forgotten what it was all about. I remember though in the days of my youth, back in my own home town, that we used to gather at the old fairgrounds at the edge of town and delegate some young man with a good voice to take book in hand and read every line of that immortal document and every signature to it, and I can recall the rapt attention of the good citizens of that day as they listened to its patriotic periods.

But I am afraid that a good deal of water—and much of it of a very muddy and snag-ridden variety—has passed under our national mill since those good old days. Thomas Jefferson, the great statesman who wrote that document and who peacefully extended the borders of our Nation toward the western ocean, has been almost forgotten, or remembered too often with a partisan sneer. Today, we are told, we are entering upon a new era—the old things must be ignored—we are facing a newer destiny—we have become a world power, they are telling us, and we must go forth and prove our power.

I do not read the destiny of America in any such terms. I recall the words of Jefferson with reference to the spirit which he infused into the Nation—that we represent the last word in a free and independent nation—that our Nation was founded in freedom and inspired with the hope of equality and happiness and liberty for all our people.

LET US TURN BACK THE PAGES

And so, today, let me turn back the pages of our history for a brief moment, and let us see if that high conception of our national ideals enunciated not only by Jefferson but by Washington and Franklin and Adams and Madison and Monroe, and by all of the great fathers of our Republic, was a mere illusion.

There comes to my mind at this moment another celebration of Independence Day that occurred a long time ago, and a speech that was made by the man who wrote the Declaration, then President of the Nation that he had helped to found. The occasion was the Fourth of July, 1806. A copy of the speech Jefferson made on that occasion has not been preserved, but in a letter that he wrote to his friend, Mr. Thomas Digges, extending him an invitation to be present at the celebration he forecasts the substance of his speech. It was a significant utterance and one that comes to us today as forcefully as if the speaker were here today in this hall. He said:

I will be happy to see you on the Fourth of July and to join with you in congratulations on the anniversary of the day which divorced us forever from the follies and crimes of Europe. We, too, shall encounter follies, but if great, they will be short, and if long, they will be righted. For Americans we have but one national birthday—the Fourth of July—the day upon which this Nation was born. That was America's first great holiday of liberty, and if it were ever possible for that fact to be forgotten which was our Nation's basic foundation, that day it will fall as other governments have in the past.

THE FOLLIES AND CRIMES OF WAR

Ponder those words of Jefferson's for a few minutes. He referred to the follies and crimes of Europe—meaning the wars of the Napoleonic era. He minced no words. Wars to him were really and literally crimes. But if he could designate the European wars of his day as crimes, what would he have said of the mechanized wars of this day? Then, at least, men fought with men in the open field and there was much to be said of courage and skill and even of the humanities of war. But what words could the author of the Declaration have found to voice his horror of the kind of warfare that is going on over there in Europe, where valiant is never the word, and where from the clouds high above and belching steel machines, death is hurled upon innocent old men, women, growing boys, babies in arms, nurses in hospitals, and children in the schools? If Jefferson saw follies and crimes over there in his day what would he have said of the shambles of European battlefields of today where the plea of humanity and mercy is never heeded and where the hope expressed by Jefferson in his declaration—the pursuit of happiness—is heard no more?

Let me at the outset make myself clear upon one subject that seems to be uppermost in the minds of our people today—that of war. I do hate war as a means of settling disputes between nations. The wars of today are not the wars of yesterday. If ever there was the word glory to be attached to feats of war—to courageous charges and heroic defenses—that word can no longer be applied to the mechanized slaughter that is going on over there in Europe today. The armies are helmeted robots. The artillery is composed of juggernaut tanks that roll over and crush human bodies, and of winged vessels, flying beyond reach in the air, that rain down bombs from the skies upon men and women and children, hospitals and churches, art galleries, and places of earthly beauty.

KEEP THAT WARFARE FROM AMERICA

Whatever glory of war ever existed has departed forever. The men who plan and conduct these new devastations they call wars are of a new and inhuman type. Courting no danger themselves, they scatter danger, destruction, death, disease, and famine across the fair fields of harmless and peaceful countries. It is purely a European system. It has no place here. We have no place there. [Applause.] The hope still clings to my heart that our America still believes in humanity, in religion, in comradeship, in freedom, and in the pursuit of happiness.

And that is all I wish to say in this Fourth of July speech about my personal opinions. I think they are well known. I have not tried to conceal them. But, lest my candor be misconstrued, I want to say and to say firmly and with deepest conviction that I consider it the duty of every American to keep that sort of warfare from our shores, and to do everything within our power to protect ourselves and our country from invasion and from every effort, no matter by whom, to transplant the despotic ideals that are responsible for conditions over there in Europe and Asia upon American soil or ever finding a foothold on the American Continent.

I believe that I can safely assert that such is my interpretation of Americanism, and that upon that doctrine I mean to take my stand and form my opinions. Let me see if I am warranted in believing that such is the destiny of our Republic and no other. At the risk of retreading old ground, let me bring to you again the voices of the men whom we have been taught to revere as the men who, in the words of Lincoln, "brought forth this Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

"THE NEW DESTINY"—A SHAM CATCHWORD

I will be brief. The words that I will recall were few. They came from men who fought for our freedom, who sat down when we had obtained it and planned for a great Nation set upon firm foundations. They were words that were inspired and every occasion that brought them forth was an epoch in the life of America. The building of this Nation was no haphazard affair—its steps were carefully mapped out—its progress sincerely and devotedly planned. And we sit here today in the full enjoyment of national peace and happiness just because it was all done that way. So, let me say, that we should not be deceived by catchwords about a new destiny. Our destiny was mapped out for us long ago—the destiny of the world's greatest democracy—the destiny of a nation that became the refuge of the afflicted and the hope and the home of the stricken from every land.

We hold these truths to be self-evident—

Said that immortal Declaration—that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

There is the cornerstone. Has it been uprooted by anything that is happening over there today—I mean uprooted here in our own country? Do we not believe still in every word of that fundamental doctrine of Americanism? Do you believe that such a doctrine is outmoded, or that our duty still is to protect here upon our shores and within our borders that doctrine in all its purity and not risk its annihilation in a barbarian warfare upon a foreign shore against men and machines that could understand not one word of the high humanities that Declaration inspires?

So let us resolve ever to defend our liberties and our precious Declaration of them with "millions for defense but not one cent for tribute" to any foreign despot or dictator of their machines of slaughter. Our duty is here. Washington told us so when our country was at its perilous crossroads and I hope that his words have not been forgotten, or his warning belittled by overzealous ambitions or misconception of national duty.

WASHINGTON'S WORDS RING TRUE TODAY

The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity—

Wrote Washington in that last warning he gave to the Nation he had served so well—must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes. * * * The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * * Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise for us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

I am aware that it has become the custom in some quarters to look upon these great words of our first President slightingly—as fitted to his period but outmoded in this era of destiny and expansion. We did forget them 20 years ago, and learned the bitter truth of every word that Washington uttered with the dead we left in Flanders and the wrecked lives that we brought back home, and the peace that we thought we had made to end all wars, with dire results we know today.

No; those words of Washington are not outmoded. They were beacons that lighted us down the decades that followed him. They were reiterated by Jefferson and Madison and Monroe. They inspired Lincoln in the hope that "such a nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal, shall long endure." They came to life again in the Monroe Doctrine, which breathed a warning to all European empires that this American Continent was not destined for their exploitations.

THE COMPASS WAS SET IN MONROE'S DAY

Let us recall on this liberty anniversary the words of that doctrine, uttered in Monroe's seventh annual Presidential message in 1824, which, in spite of partisan attack, is still firmly imbedded in the American policy. Monroe wrote, in the face of the threats of the unholy holy alliance that was scheming to establish foreign governments in South America, these calm and decisive words:

The occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American Continent, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. * * * In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy to do so. It is only when our rights are invaded, or seriously menaced, that we resent injuries or preparations for our defense. * * * We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

Jefferson, at the time, wrote to Madison to the same effect, and even quoted from Washington's farewell warnings. He said:

The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation—this sets our compass and points the course (the Monroe Doctrine) which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to meddle with cis-Atlantic affairs.

And now let me just append a statement of that good lawyer and careful Republican, Elihu Root, on this topic. In an address before the American Society of International Law he said:

As the particular occasions which called it forth (the Monroe Doctrine) have slipped back into history, the declaration itself has grown continually a more vital and insistent rule of conduct for each succeeding generation of Americans. Never for a moment have the responsible and instructed statesmen in charge of foreign affairs of the United States failed to consider themselves bound to insist upon its policy. Never has the public opinion of the people of the United States failed to support every just application of it as new occasion has arisen.

AMERICA NEED LOOK NO FURTHER

Now, there, my friends, is my Fourth of July speech. At the risk of being thought old-fashioned and retroactive, I have taken the occasion, in my own behalf, and in that of those I represent, to look back and steady my course in these perilous days by the lights of the statesmen whom I have been taught to revere as the founders and protectors of our democratic ideals. I do not think we have to look any further for a definition of true Americanism for sure guides to our duties in every present emergency than what we can find in these calm and dignified words that shaped the initial policies of our Nation, and that should still remain our beacon lights. Looking forward is always good counsel, but when we do so we should take a good long look back and see what we have passed through, what perils we have escaped, what the Republic really means, and what we must do to preserve it in its originality—the greatest democracy the world has ever known. Jefferson once said:

There were only two great democracies—France and the United States.

Today France is gone—a slave under an invader's heel. But America remains. Let it not be the last of the great democracies. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] may extend his remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made today some excerpts from a committee report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNCAN). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE FOURTH OF JULY

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will celebrate the one hundred and sixty-fourth birthday of the signing of the Declaration of Independence of the United States. I wonder when we awaken tomorrow whether we will be thinking about the pleasures of the day or whether our memories will turn backward down through the years to the scene that took place at Independence Hall in the city of Philadelphia, to the men who were there and to the principles which they were giving to the world. If we are good Americans we will refresh our memories on what those men did July 4, 1776. Had their cause failed they would all have suffered an ignominious death. What courage and faith they had in the problem which lay before them. I wonder if we have the same faith and the same courage to espouse the cause which they gave to the world 164 years ago.

A few days ago with bared head and a reverent attitude, but with gratitude and pride for American citizenship, I stood within that cradle of American freedom at old Independence Hall in the city of Philadelphia, where the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution were signed.

In that chamber is the chair used by Washington as president of the Convention that created the Constitution—the little desk on which the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution were signed, the very inkwell and the chairs used by the delegates.

As one stands in that historic place, one visions the scene and the men who brought forth a new conception of government on this earth, namely, the right of man to govern himself. They labored to lift the weights from the shoulders of mankind. Failure meant death to every one of the 56 men who signed that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence.

We pay tribute to their memory and express our gratitude for the legacy of a free Republic which we received from them, by celebrating the one-hundred and sixty-fourth anniversary of the day on which they made their heroic decision to be free.

What faith and courage they must have had in their cause to draft and sign the birth certificate of our Republic. In the light of this hour, I sometimes wonder if we have justified their courage and faith.

It is an old custom to bring gifts on a loved one's birthday. Believing that we all love and revere our country, what gifts do we bring to her on her natal day? That question prompts the asking of another. What gifts are appropriate on this day? Not money, not glory, not honor, not power; these are attributes that belong to her now.

What, then, should we bring, my fellow countrymen? We should bring ourselves, our loyalty, our patriotism, our services, and our love for this our native land. On this day of all days we should pledge anew our faith and dedicate ourselves to our country, for here is the last refuge of a free people.

These are the gifts we can bring to the land we call home. We can and we must insist that the alien and the stranger within our gates shall do likewise. As loyal citizens we can make sure that he who seeks the protection and generosity of our laws shall obey them or move out. So let us, on our Nation's birthday, bring gifts of loyalty, patriotism, and obedience, without which even this Government, great as it is, cannot long endure.

Members of the House, let me say in closing, may the clock of time never point to the hour or the day when Americans can no longer celebrate the birthday of our Republic.

God bless America,
It is our home, sweet home.

Breathes there a man
With soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land?

[Applause.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Dr. Francis E. Townsend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNCAN). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] for 10 minutes.

TORPEDO-BOAT SALE BAN

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago we were notified through the press that The Assistant Secretary of the Navy had been authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury, a very peculiar circumstance in itself, to sell certain nearly completed torpedo boats to Great Britain. An alert constituent of mine has sent to me a release by the Associated Press under date of June 24 purporting to be the text of the White House statement announcing that President Roosevelt had ordered a halt in the negotiations for the sale of 20 torpedo boats. That editorial goes on to state the law to which our friend and colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] had previously called our attention and which declares it a criminal offense to make this kind of sale. Further along in the editorial is the statement:

Lewis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy, also gave the President a memorandum in which he set forth five military advantages the Navy would have received if the proposed sale of the torpedo boats had been possible under the law. Military advantages to the Navy, the Acting Secretary said, included the following:

(1) The Navy would receive boats which would carry 21-inch standard United States Navy torpedoes instead of 18-inch torpedoes—a type of weapon obsolete in the United States Navy and not now in production, and with only a limited supply on hand.

Then it goes on to describe the fact that 21-inch torpedoes have a warhead of about double the weight of that carried by the smaller weapon, thus doubling the fire power.

In paragraph 5 of that statement it says:

Due to the fact that the 18-inch torpedo is obsolete in the United States Navy, and due to the further fact that there is a limited supply of his type of weapon on hand, it would be necessary, if we retained the boats with the 18-inch tubes, to retool up our already overloaded sources of supply for the standard 21-inch torpedo in order to manufacture reserve supplies of the 18-inch weapon.

Mr. Speaker, one thing that the Congress of the United States should ask the new Secretary of the Navy, who, I understand, will be Mr. Frank Knox, is to find out why it was that these ships were equipped with 18-inch-torpedo tubes in the first place, when 18-inch torpedoes were already obsolete. They certainly must have been obsolete at the time these boats were ordered, and if not, then they have only recently become so, because these boats have not been on order very long. It looks to me as though somebody ought to have himself looked into by this Congress for ordering 18-inch-torpedo equipment on these boats. The fact that Mr. Lewis Compton, Under Secretary of the Navy, has given that as an excuse for his proposal to sell these torpedo boats to Great Britain clearly indicates that someone is entirely incompetent, and that a thoroughgoing shake-up is not only highly desirable, but imperatively necessary in order to avoid the possibility of ordering perhaps 13½-inch guns for our new battleships when 16-inch shells are standard.

I shall not go further into this subject at this time, but it seems to me that somebody is very definitely in error, and somebody should be called to account for ever having ordered boats equipped with obsolete 18-inch torpedo tubes in the first place.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. Certainly.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I would like, if I could, to get the exact date when these 20 boats were put on order.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would be glad to have that date myself, and also the circumstances surrounding the purchase.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understand it was last year, after the war had started all over the world.

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe so.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why were they ordering torpedo boats that were out of date?

Mr. HINSHAW. They ordered them with 18-inch torpedo tubes, when the standard size is 21 inches. I cannot figure that out, and I think the Congress is entitled to know the reason. If these are the Scott-Paine type boats I think I can figure out the answer, but we should have an investigation of the whole subject and no whitewash.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am wondering how much more of our equipment recently placed on order is out of date like those torpedo boats.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to know that, too. I understand that our 37-millimeter antitank guns will not penetrate modern tank armor and that consequently the 228 of such guns that we have on hand are obsolete today, and yet we expect to obtain delivery on a considerable number in addition to that, over the next 6 months or so. There may be a number of these things that could well be looked into by the new Secretary of the Navy, and the new Secretary of War, in order to make certain that the equipment now on order shall not be obsolete before delivery.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT ON TORPEDO BOAT SALE BAN

WASHINGTON, June 24.—The text of the White House statement announcing that President Roosevelt had ordered a halt in negotiations for sale of 20 torpedo boats was as follows:

The President today authorized the Navy Department to put an end to pending negotiations with the Electric Boat Co. by which the Department would have accepted deferred delivery on 20 experimental motor torpedo boats—boats which the British Government wanted to purchase, and which, if the negotiations had been successfully concluded, the Electric Boat Co. would have sold to the British.

The President's decision putting a stop to the negotiations, however, was reached by him as soon as he received an informal opinion prepared by the Attorney General. In this opinion the Attorney General advised the President that the sale and delivery of motor torpedo boats by an American builder to a belligerent government "would seem to be prohibited by section 3 of title V of the act of June 15, 1917," which provides:

"During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built as a vessel of war with any intent or under any agreement that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation or with the reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States."

Lewis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy, also gave the President today a memorandum in which he set forth five military advantages the Navy would have received if the proposed sale of the torpedo boats had been possible under the law. Military advantages to the Navy, the Acting Secretary said, included the following:

(1) The Navy would receive boats which will carry 21-inch standard United States Navy torpedoes instead of 18-inch torpedoes, a type of weapon obsolete in the United States Navy and not now in production and with only a limited supply on hand. The 21-inch torpedoes have a warhead of about double the weight of that carried by the smaller weapon, thus doubling the fire power. The range of the larger torpedoes is double that of the smaller ones and the speed of the 21-inch weapon is considerably greater than the 18-inch torpedo.

(2) By accepting deferred deliveries and reordering, the production not only of hulls but of engines will be accelerated, the production of engines being the bottleneck in a small boat-building program exactly as they are in the case of aircraft production.

(3) The Navy Department would be able to effect betterments and improvements both in hull design and engine performance.

(4) No appreciable amount of time would be lost, because during the 6 months it would take to construct the replacement boats the Navy would be engaged in running competitive tests on the English and American designed boats in order to determine an ultimate type for mass production. It would also require this length of time to develop tactical uses and doctrine as well as for the training of personnel.

(5) Due to the fact that the 18-inch torpedo is obsolete in the United States Navy and due to the further fact that there is a limited supply of this type of weapon on hand, it would be necessary, if we retained the boats with the 18-inch torpedo tubes, to retool up our already overloaded sources of supply for the standard 21-inch torpedo in order to manufacture reserve supplies of the 18-inch weapon.

Acting Secretary Compton said, in view of the Attorney General's opinion, the Navy Department had requested the President's authority to stop pending negotiations with the Electric Boat Co.

He declared, however, that the original action of the Navy Department, acceding to the request that the Navy accept deferred deliveries on the boats, "was in no way surreptitious and was predicated entirely on what was considered to be by those competent to judge to the miltiary advantage of the United States Navy."

Had it been possible under the law to carry out the original proposal, Mr. Compton insisted, the "original objectives sought in the experimental small-boat program" in no way would have been impaired.

The President concurred in the Attorney General's opinion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

AMERICAN FREEDOM—STILL OUR MOST PRECIOUS HERITAGE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the Fourth of July is the greatest national holiday in the American calendar. This is a magnificent day in the history of a civilization which has no equal anywhere on the face of the globe, for nothing can destroy the enthusiasm and hope which are synonymous with America.

In the last decade it has become fashionable for pseudo liberals to laugh at those of us who choose to "wave the flag." We have been derided and mimicked by young men who regard themselves as superior to the feeling of patriotism. Today this attitude is gone with the wind. On this Fourth of July no American, no matter what may be his political views, no matter what may be his racial origin, can prevent himself from being proud that he lives in the United States of America in the year 1940.

We have our problems; we have our troubles; and it would be a foolish man who sought to minimize their importance. For the last decade we have been passing through a series of tremendous economic catastrophes. They have taxed our strength. They have cost us billions in terms of dollars. No one knows how much they have cost us in terms of human suffering. Yet we know that the spirit of America has not wavered in the face of the blows we have received. There is still present in our land the courage, the bravery, the energy, and the loyalty which have made this Nation of ours the greatest in the records of human history.

Look about you in the world today. Everywhere we see darkness and chaos. In Asia savage warfare rages on unknown fronts. The soldiers of Japan make war upon those who are their brothers in blood, skin, and even in their basic cultures. In the Balkans farmers tend their flocks and look fearfully toward the skies for enemy bombers which may spring from the clouds without a moment's warning. Central Europe is a tinder box, which may burst into flame at any instant. In every town and hamlet of the British countryside young boys and girls are practicing the sickening art of gas drills. Old men and women time their speed in reaching the frightful protection of bombproof dugouts. The world has gone mad with fright. Men and women no longer reason across the seas in terms of human progress. They have abandoned all pretense of creating human values which will endure beyond the next day's newspaper. Everyone retains an attitude of tension, moving about like robots, refusing to think of what the morrow may bring.

It is a harrowing picture. And it is not enough that we in America say to ourselves, "Thank God that we live here in our own country." We are fortunate. We are grateful to Providence for the privilege of living within the protective arms of our great country. But we must learn from the experience of those less lucky than ourselves the lessons of preparedness.

This Fourth of July must be a day of rededication. It must be a day when all the citizens of America rise to their feet to reaffirm their loyalty to the traditions which have made this land of ours what it is. As we look across the seas we know what it is that we have retained in these United States which our fellow nations have lost. More than any other people on earth, we are free. We are free to think, to act, to speak, to write, to do as we choose to a greater extent than any other band of men living in our generation. Of course, we are bound by the necessities of life. We must work. We must earn our livelihoods. We must take orders—all of us, from the wealthiest landowner in the Nation to the humblest worker, must take our orders. In that sense, no man is free. But in the right of freedom of expression we are more wealthy than the owner of the richest factory in all Europe.

Both of our great political parties have accepted as basic certain fundamental principles. To Republicans and Democrats alike the Bill of Rights is sacred ground. So long as America remains worthy of its name those rights guaranteed by our Constitution will continue to remain inviolate. When once a political party challenges the validity of our basic freedom, this Nation will cease to be America. But, by the grace of God, we trust and pray that our people will never alter the human guaranties which form our most precious heritage—freedom for all men.

Our people face a danger on this Fourth of July in the year 1940. Everywhere in the world the poison of hatred which has fouled the air of Europe and Asia is pervading the atmosphere. True Americans must fight this disease. Whether it call itself fascism or communism, whether it take the form of Berlin or Leningrad, despotism and tyranny are still the same. They crush the human soul. They destroy books, art, music. And with the death of all that has been so painfully created by the minds of men since the dawn of culture there dies the spark of human kindness which makes life worth the living.

Here in our own Nation we have constructed a household reared upon freedom and anchored in the firm granite of tolerance—tolerance to all men who love our country, tolerance to all men who come to us seeking the right to live in peace and happiness. Live and let live in America means live and help live. Perhaps we are idealists in this great and abundant land. But our ideals are not the barren abstract ideals of the philosopher. We seek to practice them in the daily activities of our lives.

Those ideals are under fire today. Yet to me they remain the most noble element of our American civilization. We must labor to rebuild them, to reaffirm them, to train a new generation which will understand them and revere them as did our fathers and their fathers before them.

Education is the safeguard of democracy now and forever. It is our solemn duty to educate the rising generation to a realization of the meaning of true democracy. It is not enough to teach the glib externals of American citizenship. Our boys and girls may recite with quick fluency the names of the principal actors in the national drama. We must not—we dare not—stop at this if we are to preserve the democratic system which we love. Our children and their children to follow them must understand the meaning of American idealism. It is our task to convince them that human life is not cheap; to make them understand that each of us, no matter what may be his color, his creed, or his origin, stands in the sight of America as a human being worthy of all that life has to offer. The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness must not be dismissed by our Nation if it is to remain the citadel of man's freedom when we are gone.

To the fathers and mothers of today there comes the opportunity to play a glorious role in the determination of the future. We are destined to aid the process of restoring the inspiration of American history. This generation, with its ever-present temptation to rely upon others for assistance, needs more Abraham Lincolns. We need young men and women who will see visions, who will discover new frontiers of science, thought, and invention.

The New Deal for the past 7 years and more has destroyed the incentive of our people. Republicans are not alone in their assertion that huge segments of our population have been pauperized by the program created at Washington. Social workers, who come into daily contact with thousands of families each year, will testify to the creation of a new attitude of shiftless indifference in thousands of young people. They have come to tell us, "Why look for work? I know I can't find any. I'll sit home and let the Government take care of me. If they refuse, we'll vote those who oppose us out of office and put in men who will do what we tell them."

There can be no future for a Nation afflicted with this mortal disease of self-destruction. Happily, there are in our country millions more who refuse to resign themselves to this fate. They know that if they take heart, if they will it, we shall once more become a nation of busy factories, tremendous industries, the America which we shall again rebuild.

On this Fourth of July there are idle hands in America. But there are brave and free minds too. There are minds which recall that the problems we face are problems made by men. We know that our factories are the most productive in the world; that our natural resources from the Atlantic to the Pacific are still the largest undeveloped reservoir known to man; that we can produce in abundance. Men have created the problem of unemployment, and those problems which men can create, men of good will and courage can solve.

We must be grateful on this holiday of our freedom that we in America have still the right to make our own decisions on the manner in which we shall meet our problems. No dictator seeks to direct our thoughts. No tyrant writes the editorials which all of us must read. We bend no knee to an arrogant overlord; our "good-byes" to our friends still mean "God be with you"— we need not hail the superman.

Perhaps someone in the infinite wisdom of a great genius might be able to solve every human problem with a stroke of the pen. Our Nation is committed to the belief that no one man may be trusted with such powers. We prefer to muddle through by our own free wits. A great student of government once wrote:

> It is better to govern oneself badly than to be governed well by a master. When the master governs well, all is good, but his successor may be evil, and freedom is at an end.

Americans, wherever they may be throughout the world, must rally to their flag on this Fourth of July. Our's is not the cause of oppression; it is not the love of conquest; it is not the will to hate. We have might; we have strength. Within our armies lies the potential force of a resolute nation of 130,000,000 men, women, boys, and girls who thrill to the sound of America. Our cannons can roar. Our planes can darken the skies with their wings. We glory in our power. But we do not thrust ourselves upon the earth like the ancient Colossus. Men need not fear us; for America knows her place in the sun.

Today, it is our duty to lead the world in reestablishing the lost hopes and ideals of the Bible.

The Fourth of July sounds no call to war in our ears. It brings us before the nations of the earth pleading with them to consecrate themselves once more, as one greater than ourselves consecrated Himself almost 2,000 years ago—to the Brotherhood of Man and the Fatherhood of God.

The world has forgotten tolerance, kindness, justice, and love today. In America, we must educate a generation which will grow to stalwart manhood courageously and honorably to teach the world these forgotten truths.

Let us thank these who founded this Nation for teaching us to be free men; men who are still able to think of freeing those of our brothers in other lands, the lessons of American liberty in a year of darkness.

JULY 4, 1940

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the fine and able address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Tomorrow marks the birthday of this great Republic. I want to say on this occasion, for I understand we will not be in session tomorrow, that with World War developments we must not forget the serious and critical condition in which this Republic finds itself at this period of time. Today after 7½ years of experiments, most of them borrowed from Moscow, Russia, we have an unemployment problem; we have other domestic problems that are more serious than any that have ever confronted this Government of ours during its entire history. Millions of men are out of work; millions of young people who have grown up within the last few years who, on account of wrong governmental policies, have been denied the opportunity that comes to a free people to earn wages and to make a living.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS CRITICAL

I was reminded very forcibly of that fact when I had a visitor in my office this morning. The mother of a young unmarried man 32 years of age came in to plead with me to secure a job for this young man. The father is employed. Months and months have gone by during which period of time he has tried to find something to do. His case is typical of thousands—yes, millions—of people all over the length and breadth of this land.

UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

I do not say it in a spirit of vindictiveness, but I say as a matter of fact, that all of the experiments and all of the waste of money for the past 7½ years by the administration have gone for nought as far as doing something for the American people is concerned, and we are now where we started over 7 years ago. If that policy is to continue, if the results of those experiments are to be adopted, they will increase the ranks of those who cannot find work and eventually wreck the bulwark of liberty which the people on July 4, 1776, pronounced and presented to the world.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

It would do us all good to read the Declaration of Independence, written by Thomas Jefferson. I just give you a brief quotation. He said:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

This declaration tomorrow will have a double meaning. First, it will be a challenge to those who have been in control of our Government for almost 8 years and whose record is one of failure. Second, it will be a challenge to the people of this country to think about World War conditions and think of the philosophy of the Old World which is about to prevail, which turns back the clock of history a few hundred years and reduces the peoples of Europe to the point where they are vassals and where the progress of mankind began. [Applause.]

DISLOYAL ELEMENTS THREATEN US

It has well been said, Mr. Speaker, that the dangers to America are from within and not from without. During past years we have had disloyal elements in this country. They have sought to undermine our system of government. They are opposed to the Declaration of Independence and its declaration in favor of human rights and freedom and all of the advantages that go to a free people. We have been designating this class of people who oppose American institutions as Communists. It has now become fashionable to refer to them as "fifth columnists." The name by which they are known makes no particular difference, but it is high time that people who believe in the Constitution of the United States declare themselves and act accordingly. We have had too much of Russia and Stalin and communism and less of the doctrines of Americanism. This new philosophy that the Government owns the people and that people should be regimented and reduced to a state of serfdom is an "ism" that may well be looked over carefully on the Fourth day of July.

With World War developments during the past year, our philosophy holds an added significance. We may soon become the last land which recognizes the supremacy of the individual. Time has settled many world-war questions which have greatly concerned the American people. However, it has not settled the question of national defense. For many years the pacifists have dominated in many quarters the thought and actions of our people. This great army of pacifists has advocated that we have no army for our protection and no navy for our defense. They have criticized those who would vote for appropriations to build airplanes and train pilots to man them, for appropriations to strengthen the Army and to expand the Navy.

WE NEED ADEQUATE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Over a period of years I have fought this false ideal and this false theory. I have said before, and I say now, that I do not subscribe to the silly doctrine of "peace at any price." My record shows that I have supported legislation that would help build adequate air forces, an adequate army and an adequate navy. I am proud of that record. I think that I express the hope of millions of my fellow countrymen when I say that an adequate defense program is the one great need at this time and that the best way for the United States to command the respect of foreign countries is to be prepared to defend its honor and its institutions, if we are ever attacked by enemies from abroad.

We are opposed to sending American soldiers to European battlefields, and people of good judgment do not believe that such a course will be necessary. A program of preparedness ought to make it unnecessary.

Let us make no mistake about the way we celebrate the birthday of our Nation, and let us freely admit that as the world changes from day to day those changes have their effect upon our country.

DAVID LAWRENCE ARTICLE

I have before me a "Newsgram" from the United States News under date of July 5. This is a paper published by David Lawrence, one of our outstanding political writers. This item calls attention to the fact that the war abroad may be over in the near future. It may be that there will be no Allies, and that the tendencies of today will become settled questions. What will be the attitude of our Government and our country toward a possible new order in Europe? This and many other questions are suggested by the item that I have before me. Will there be an economic war, and what policy will the leaders of our Nation take? I do not here enumerate the many suggested possibilities contained in this Newsgram, but I do say that it is a thought-provoking one. Now is the time for people in high official position to refrain from too much talk and do more thinking along constructive lines. I commend to you a reading of this document because July 4, 1940, marks a new date line in the history of America. For the first time since July 4, 1776, the foundations of our Government are threatened and the security and safety of our people stand to be questioned and menaced.

May the light of truth prevail and direct us along the lines that will lead to safety and to the preservation of our American institutions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, our everlasting portion and the Lord of lords, in these hallowed moments it is given us to realize the courage, the devotion, and the noble character of our forefathers. We pray Thee to give us the might of a growing faith in Thy providence, reminding us that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who built it." We praise Thee for those champions of liberty, truth, and justice. May their spirits live today in the ideals of our Republic as they bow over us in sacred benediction. From the unseen heights of Thy throne Thou didst guide their broken columns as they struggled to bring order out of chaos, service out of selfishness, and freemen out of the throes of political tyranny. Oh, may our heroic past interpret to us our patriotic duty to redouble our devotion and our enthusiasm for our homeland. O Lord God, do Thou stand in the midst of all earthly scenes and direct the upward movements of this weary world. Oh, lead us all up the hills of time until Christendom conquers and civilization triumphs. In the name of the world's Redeemer we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FOURTH OF JULY, 1940

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, very rarely, I believe, has either branch of the Congress met on the Fourth of July. Today the House of Representatives has met, not to transact any business but merely to adjourn over until next Monday, in order to comply with the constitutional requirement that—

Neither House, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than 3 days.

But this brief session affords the opportunity to consider the significance of that fateful occasion 164 years ago which Independence Day commemorates.

The Declaration of Independence made that day was signed by men fully aware of the dangers which they incurred, of the peril that if their cause did not prevail each and all of them were doomed to a felon's or a traitor's death. I wonder how often we look over that great Declaration. It is worth while, I believe, to consider it very often, to weigh what it means to us and how much it meant to those who took their lives and their liberties in their hands to declare, preserve, and maintain independence and freedom for America. God grant that in the grim days ahead of us we may all prove worthy of the priceless heritage transmitted to us by the signers of the immortal Declaration.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read at this point the Declaration of Independence.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado (reading):

IN CONGRESS, JULY 4, 1776.

THE UNANIMOUS DECLARATION OF THE THIRTEEN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.———We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.—Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.———He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.———He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.———He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.———He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.———He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.———He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.——He has endeavoured to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.———He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers———He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.———He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.———He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.———He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.———He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:—For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:—For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:—For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world:—For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent:—For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury:—For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses:—For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighbouring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:—For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:—For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.—He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.———He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.———He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to compleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty & perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.———He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.———He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavoured to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions. In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people. Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our Brittish brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.———

We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do.———And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

John Hancock, Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, George Walton, William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, John Penn, Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Jr., Arthur Middleton, Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Lightfoot Lee, Carter Braxton, Robert Morris, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, John Morton, George Clymer, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross, Caesar Rodney, George Read, Thomas McKean, William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris, Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark, Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry, Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery, Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcott, Matthew Thornton.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from today's New York Times entitled "Fourth of July—1940."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to follows:

FOURTH OF JULY—1940

The Fourth of July is a welcome holiday. It is also something else, and this year is a good year in which to recall what else it is. Let us try to put ourselves in the place of the men who voted in favor of the Declaration of Independence in July 1776.

By every calculation that a military man would take into account their position was desperate and their declaration rash. At the very moment when they were voting their "self-evident truths" there lay in or near New York Harbor a British expeditionary force of 110 warships and transports, carrying 25,000 well-equipped regular soldiers. To oppose this army, which had been ordered to knock the notion of independence out of American heads, General Washington had 15,000 militia, few of them with any soldierly training or experience, and nearly all of them accustomed to going home when they felt like it.

Still to come were the loss of Long Island and Manhattan, the retreat through the Jerseys, the horrible winter at Valley Forge, the treason of Benedict Arnold, and the more than one occasion when Washington contemplated retiring with his troops beyond the Alleghenies as the sole alternative to surrender. The men who drew up and signed the Declaration stood a fair chance of having to punctuate it with their worldly goods and their personal liberty, and perhaps to endorse it with their blood.

Under these circumstances the Declaration was not written for the edification of school children. It might easily have been a last will and testament. It was not made good without peril, suffering, and the willingness of humble soldiers of the line to go hungry, barefoot, cold, and ragged, and to risk wounds and death. When it was required of them, they died for liberty—and that was no figure of speech. They knew what liberty was because, as the Declaration recites, an "absolute tyranny" was trying to deprive them of it. It was as real to them as bread and butter. They had a passionate enthusiasm for it.

We are luckier than they were, and luckier than most present-day European countries, since no "absolute tyrant" is now occupying our territory or sending fleets and armies against us. We are luckier because we have more time. But let us remember that we may not have very much time. If we do not love liberty as much as they did, are not resolved to risk and sacrifice as much to keep it, do not despise tyrants as they did, the time may come when the words of the Declaration will be a bitter mockery.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes that I may make further comment on the remarkable document we have just heard read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, having just listened to that immortal state paper, the Declaration of Independence, it seems superfluous to say anything after the reading of this remarkable document. I know that all of us are thinking today of the work of the men of 164 years ago in the preparation of this great and significant statement and I have asked for this time that I might make a few observations which have occurred to me in my study of early American political history.

We have heard many contrasts between writers and writings. We have heard contrasts between certain famous documents. Sometimes it is the Declaration of Independence contrasted with a similar great state paper of the Old World; and what a rich field of study if we had time to go into it.

For instance, I would like nothing better than to make a little comparison of the American Declaration of Independence and the French Declaration of the Rights of Man. In their philosophy they are very similar. If they differ in any respects we must bear in mind the fact that the Frenchmen had 13 years more in which to study the matter, gathering much no doubt from Thomas Jefferson. You will recall that the French Declaration of the Rights of Man was formulated in the year 1789, a generation after Jefferson wrote this memorable paper in 1776.

Sometimes we contrast the Declaration of Independence with that of the supreme law of the land, and to contrast them we use certain terms as, for instance, we speak of the Declaration as a cornerstone and we speak of the Constitution as a foundation. That makes a good contrast. Sometimes we speak of the Declaration of Independence as the abstract of title to our American freedom. If that is a good figure to use, then we ought to speak of the Constitution of the United States as the title deed of American freedom.

I like to think of the Declaration of Independence as the forerunner, the prelude of the Constitution of the United States. In our philosophy of government it is a cornerstone, but it is more than a cornerstone. It embodies and foreshadows those important constitutional principles of government which were later reversed and incorporated in the fundamental law of our land. So that if you read the governmental evils complained of in the Declaration with discerning eye, you can see what is not to be basic in our governmental structure, for the exact opposite is to be the American way.

The first part of the Declaration of Independence announced a philosophy of government which was indeed revolutionary for those days. The latter part of the Declaration, as we have just heard it read, is a bill of indictment against the evils of the government by the English King. Notice those indictments, and what the fathers pointed out as things that ought not to be done, as I said before, by reversing each item you will have a forecast of things that ought to be done and how they should be done. I cannot recall the exact words of these items or the exact order in which they were read to us, but will try to enumerate a few of them:

He has made judges dependent upon his will alone for the tenure of their office and the amount of payment of their salaries.

Reverse that and see what we are to have. We shall have quite the opposite under our new Constitution which is to be established later; a judicial system free and independent from such arbitrary executive control. And we have it. For our Federal judges we have life tenure, adequate salaries, removal only for misbehaviour, and that sort of thing.

He has dissolved legislative bodies repeatedly for opposing with manly firmness his invasion of people's rights.

The King of England not only dissolved the Parliament in an earlier time, but he dissolved colonial legislatures of the royal colonies. However, from this charge in the Declaration one may predict that when we create the Constitution, we shall say that the Executive shall not have the power to send the legislative body home. The same rule holds whether in the Nation or in a State. No Governor of a State has the right to dissolve a State legislature however much he may disagree with it or however much he may dislike it. No President of the United States, except in one circumstance, is given power to dissolve the national lawmaking body, no matter how he may disagree with it or dislike its action.

Again it said:

He has called representative bodies to meet at places inconvenient and distant from public depositories with the purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his demands.

When we create a new Constitution, we shall have a specific place at which the legislative body of the Nation shall meet and at stated times, and not be dependent entirely upon the call of the Executive.

Again it is said:

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States by raising the conditions of new appropriations of land.

The reversal of this policy has given our Nation by constitutional authority a most liberal immigration and naturalization policy, and coupled with that a generous land-grant policy by which the land-hungry people of the Old World have been able to spread from sea to shining sea—from the gray Atlantic to the sun-kissed Pacific—in conquering the wilderness as they marched toward the West.

Another indictment of the King's government was:

He has kept among us standing armies in times of peace.

In opposition to this it is an outstanding constitutional provision with us that no soldiers shall be quartered in private homes without the consent of the owners. Closely connected with this, Jefferson charges that the King has "pretended to make the military power superior to the civil power." Far different from this evil is the general constitutional provision through America, and the explicit constitutional mandate, that the civil power shall always be superior to the military power. It is one of the chief characteristics of American Government that the highest authorities in the land are civil rather than military officials.

We might go on at some length, but one more of Jefferson's indictments of the King's political evils and its constitutional remedy must suffice. Jefferson complained that the King had deprived Americans of the benefit of trial by jury. As in the preceding half dozen cases, exactly the opposite was established by constitutional law and the right of trial by jury was made a fixture in our judicial system.

These are only a few. There are many other respects in which the Declaration of Independence foreshadows what we were later to have in our basic law. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE FOURTH OF JULY—STEPHEN FOSTER

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we always celebrate the Fourth of July as the birthday of the Nation and call attention to the fact that it is the anniversary of the deaths of three of our former Presidents—Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, both of whom died on July 4, 1826, and James Monroe, who died on July 4, 1831. We also recall the fact that it is the anniversary of the birth of former President Calvin Coolidge, who was born on July 4, 1872.

It is also the birthday of one of America's leading literary lights, Nathaniel Hawthorne, who was born, I believe, on July 4, 1804.

Another significant fact is that it is the anniversary of the birth of another leading American who will live perhaps as long as any of these, Stephen Foster, who wrote the popular songs of the Nation a hundred years ago, songs that stir the human heart today just as much as they did then, if not more.

Stephen Foster was born on the day Thomas Jefferson and John Adams died, July 4, 1826. More than any other man of his day, he shaped the thoughts of the American people through the songs he wrote, chief among which, I would say, are Suwannee River, My Old Kentucky Home, and Old Black Joe.

We praise the man who fights our battles; we honor the man who makes our laws; we remunerate the man who controls our finances; but, in my humble judgment, there is none who deserves more praise, more credit, or more commendation at the hands of enlightened humanity than he who touches the golden harp of song and stirs with love and hope the languid souls of listening men.

It could not be expressed better than in the words of our old friend, Edgar Guest, the present poet laureate of the common people, when he said that—

Music is the tonic of the tired and weary mind.
It is comfort for the lonely and it's pictures for the blind;
It is sympathy and laughter, it is faith, and mirth and prayer,
It is kindness in its brightest dress and is welcomed everywhere.

It strengthens hearts courageous, and it urges men along;
The tide of battle often has been altered by a song.
No race can live without it; it is heard from pole to pole.
For music is the utterance and expression of the soul.

We catch it by the cradle in the mother's lullaby,
The sweetest form of music that is heard beneath the sky.
The youth must sing at wooing, and the soldier on the field
Will march to death undaunted with music for a shield.

We sing our Nation's anthems, as a pledge that we are one;
We sing of future glories and of struggles we have won.
And our race goes bravely forward, head erect and clean and strong.
In the fellowship of music and the brotherhood of song.

[Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, as I have sat here listening to the inspiring messages on this 4th day of July, for some reason or other I have felt an impulse to say just a few words on this occasion.

As I have sat here I have tried to visualize in my imagination what occurred in Philadelphia 164 years ago. I can see in my mind's eye old Independence Hall. I can see a great milling crowd, strange people, Quakers with their large hats, the Dutch, the Swedes, and other nationalities gathered around that old citadel of liberty. I can hear them on the street corners inquiring, "I wonder what they are doing in there; I wonder if they dare do it," and milling around there for hours during the critical moments wondering what was going to happen. I can see that small boy coming out of the front of that building.

Lifting my eyes I can see up in the belfry the old man, the grandfather of that boy, and as the boy comes out a great hush falls over that crowd. It is a tense moment in the history of the world. Then the boy cups his hands to his lips and shouts to the old man in the belfry: "Ring, Grandpa; ring for liberty!" Then I can see the old man grasping that rope and ringing that old bell, sending out its messages to humanity. Then the couriers start out through the swamps and the wilderness to the little lone cabins, carrying the message that the deed is done; independence has been declared.

Not long after that we see a pioneer going to his log cabin out through the woods and the swamps with his musket, the wife remaining home, later to melt up the pewter plates for bullets, act as nurse and as doctor and as defender of the home against prowling Indians.

Then as I sat here today I visualized Washington carrying on the great work; half-fed, half-starved soldiers fighting on and on, losing battle after battle but, eventually, winning the war.

What a glorious heritage is ours! What a wonderful thought it was when those men who escaped from tyranny to this country, finally after they had finished their log cabins, felt that great thought bursting upon their souls, "I am a man. I face the wilderness. I am 3,000 miles from tyranny. I am a man." And the next logical thought was "I am a free man," and they declared their freedom 164 years ago today.

Let us bow our heads in gratitude for that heritage. Let us leave nothing undone that will preserve that heritage unimpaired for future generations yet unborn. [Applause.] Thank you.

Mr. President, I present, for appropriate reference, resolutions adopted by the Associated Industries of Vermont at its annual meeting on June 20, 1940, at Woodstock, Vt., urging passage of the Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, amendments to the Wages and Hours Act, and the Walter-Logan bill. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDUSTRY'S PLEDGE—ENDORSEMENT BY ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES OF VERMONT

Industry recognizes the gravity of the defense problem which faces the Nation and the demands which will be made upon the skill and capacity of industry. It recognizes that the situation calls for the full power of America's genius in industrial management and mass production.

Therefore this association endorses the pledge of the National Association of Manufacturers of the knowledge and experience and the utmost energy of its members to the task ahead.

It commits itself to this effort, abhorring war and urging every possible effort to avoid it compatible with the national honor and safety.

It pledges continued opposition of industry to profiteering. No man or group should use the national emergency to serve his or its selfish ends.

Adopted June 20, 1940.

RESOLUTION

It is the sense of this meeting that Congress should remain in continuous session during the existing emergency and should give early consideration to Wagner Act changes, the Walter-Logan bill to impose standards on Government administrative agencies, for changes in the wage-hour law, and modification of all legislation which will tend to hinder or obstruct the capacity and efficiency of industry to provide the needs for adequate defense and national preparedness.

Adopted by Associated Industries of Vermont June 20, 1940.

WAGNER ACT AMENDMENTS

That the Associated Industries of Vermont endorse the action by the National Association of Manufacturers recommending Senate action during this session on the Smith bill amending the National Labor Relations Act and that the Senators from Vermont be advised of this endorsement.

Adopted June 20, 1940.

Mr. President, I will simply state, for the benefit of the Senate, that the House, in amending the measure by striking out Canton Island and Enderbury Island, failed to strike them out in the title, and also in striking out those islands failed to include the word "and" before the words "Jarvis Island." The purpose of the concurrent resolution is to correct those errors.

NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS—RESOLUTIONS OF KOSCIUSKO (MISS.) ROTARY CLUB

Mr. BILBO presented resolutions of the Kosciusko (Miss.) Rotary Club, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the membership of the Kosciusko Rotary Club of Kosciusko, Miss., feels that the people of this country and our National Government are now experiencing the gravest crisis of our entire national life by reason of the threats of foreign aggression, the curtailment of our world trade and activities, and the suppression of our ideals of individual rights, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and

Whereas we feel that in this time of peril it is the solemn duty of every man, woman, and child of our great land to back and give support to our national administration in its efforts to place our country in a state of preparedness for any eventuality, that we may thereby be enabled to show to the whole world that we will not tolerate any curtailment or infringement upon the civil rights guaranteed to us by the law of the land and the Constitution of the United States of America: Be it therefore

Resolved, That by these resolutions we desire to go on record as according our entire support to our Government in its preparedness program and we pledge ourselves to render any assistance of which we may be capable in this great undertaking; be it further

Resolved, That we urge upon those in authority the fullest efforts toward stamping out any and all subversive elements within our territory which are opposed to our form of government or the abridgement of our national liberties; that we have no patience with any so-called "fifth column," communism, or any element which seeks the destruction of our present conception of government; that we believe such activities should be eliminated in their inception before they have an opportunity to take root and develop into a serious menace; be it further

Resolved, That in making adequate preparation we advocate the principle of military training for all able-bodied men of proper age in order that our country may at all times have an adequate reserve of manpower available, capable, and effective; be it further

Resolved, That in this time of peril it behooves every citizen to devote his full time and effort toward preparing our country for emergencies, and to that end we do not feel that the present wage and hour law, which restricts labor to a 40-hour-a-week schedule, is conducive toward preparedness and efficiency, and it is our thought that this law should be so changed or repealed so as to eliminate this objectionable feature; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States and to each of our Senators and the Representative from this congressional district.

Adopted and passed this 19th day of June 1940.

RESOLUTION OF DANIEL BEALL POST, NO. 18, AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. BILBO presented a resolution of Daniel Beall Post, No. 18, American Legion, of Holmes County, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the United States is faced with conditions fraught with the most serious eventualities of its history as a Nation; and

Whereas potential foes from within and from without threaten to undermine and eventually destroy our democratic form of government; and

Whereas such a government is the only one that guarantees protection and freedom to its individual citizens and an equal individual opportunity in life regardless of race, creed, or color; and

Whereas we cherish and hold sacred the principles upon which this Government is founded; and

Whereas the time has come when every person enjoying the benefits and protection of the United States of America should be required to make known his national loyalty and devotion: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by Daniel Beall Post, No. 18, of the American Legion:

(1) That the President and Congress of the United States of America should now and immediately forego and forget any political party or personal consideration in plans for the development of an adequate national defense;

(2) That such laws should be immediately enacted and such steps taken as may be necessary to call to the services of the Nation in the development of an adequate national defense all industrial ability or facilities regardless of present or previous political differences or party lines;

(3) That immediate steps be taken to mobilize and equip with the most modern and adequate equipment an army, navy, and air force sufficient to meet any national emergency that may arise;

(4) That such steps be taken to coordinate all efforts to build up our national defense so as to eliminate all red tape and attain the highest possible speed, consistent with accuracy and good judgment;

(5) That any and all parts of the so-called Johnson Act which may in any way prohibit or hinder full support and aid to the allied nations in the way of equipment, munitions, or economic assistance by the United States be repealed;

(6) That immediate steps be taken to apprehend and mete out severe punishment to all persons in the United States of America guilty of national disloyalty, sabotage, or "fifth column" activities;

(7) That such a universal military training act be passed that will not only train the American youth for intelligent and efficient national defense but will develop in them a sincere loyalty and devotion to the United States of America;

(8) That this post cooperate in every way possible with those in authority in carrying out the provisions of this resolution; and

(9) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senators PAT HARRISON and T. G. BILBO, a copy to Congressman W. M. WHITTINGTON, a copy to National and State American Legion headquarters, and a copy to the Lexington Advertiser for publication.

RESOLUTIONS OF CITIZENS OF WAKE COUNTY (N. C.) AND VICINITY

Mr. REYNOLDS presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Wake County (N. C.) and vicinity, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the present European war has raised very difficult problems for the American Nation in both its foreign relations and in its domestic problems; and

Whereas under our democratic system of government it is proper and fitting that citizens of the United States make known to their President and to their representatives in Congress their attitude and desires in this crisis; and

Whereas, we, a group of citizens of Wake County (N. C.) and vicinity, are imbued with the patriotic desire to promote the welfare of our country and of the world at large: Be it

Resolved, That it is our belief and desire that our Government should pursue the following policies in the present emergency:

1. That every effort should be made to prevent our country's becoming a belligerent in the war, and that we ought not to send our men to fight in Europe or in European waters.

2. That it is the sentiment of this meeting that our country should immediately and vigorously prepare for its adequate defense against any enemy or combination of enemies.

3. That we approve our Government's efforts to promote the solidarity of the New World and favor something in the nature of a league of nations for the Western Hemisphere, which might later serve as a model for the remainder of the world.

4. That while meeting the threat from abroad we should not abandon and should continue efforts to improve the lot of the common man in this country.

5. That in the present critical situation we should make every effort to visualize clearly and to promote the interests of our own country, for we believe that, in the long run, we can thereby best serve the entire world.

6. That in our justifiable efforts to stamp out subversive movements in our country, we should take great care to preserve those rights and privileges which are guaranteed in our Bill of Rights and which are the heritage of every American citizen. We should do everything in our power to avoid sacrificing those very liberties we are seeking to protect.

7. That these resolutions are passed without reference to the current political campaign for we believe that loyalty and patriotism to our country are above parties and politics.

8. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to the North Carolina Members of both Houses of Congress.

ADJUSTMENT OF LIMITATIONS ON PROFITS OF CERTAIN CONTRACTORS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2464) to amend the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended (49 Stat. 1926; 34 U. S. C., Supp. IV, 496; sec. 14 of Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), to adjust the limitations on the profits of certain contractors with the United States," which were, on page 1, to strike out all after line 8 down to and including "thereof", in line 23 of page 2, and insert "net loss on all such contracts or subcontracts for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or portion thereof completed by the particular contractor or subcontractor within any income taxable year, such net loss shall be allowed as a credit in determining the excess profit, if any, during the next succeeding 4 income taxable years; that if there is a net loss, or a net profit less than 12 percent, as aforesaid on all such contracts or subcontracts for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or portion thereof completed by the particular contractor or subcontractor within any income taxable year, such net loss or deficiency in profit shall be allowed as a credit in determining the excess profit, if any, during the next succeeding 4 income taxable years; and that the method of ascertaining the amount of excess profit initially fixed upon shall be determined on or before June 30, 1939, in the case of contracts or subcontracts for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or portion thereof, and shall be determined on or before August 31, 1940, in the case of contracts or subcontracts for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or portion thereof"; and page 3, to strike out all of section 2.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the first proviso of section 3 (b) of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended by the act of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926; 34 U. S. C., Supp. V, 496), and by section 14 of the act of April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 560; 34 U. S. C., Supp. V, 496), and as made applicable to contracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army by section 14 of such act of April 3, 1939, is hereby further amended to read as follows: "Provided, That if there is a net loss on all such contracts or subcontracts completed by the particular contractor or subcontractor within any income taxable year, such net loss shall be allowed as a credit in determining the excess profit, if any, during the next succeeding 4 income taxable years; and that the method of ascertaining the amount of excess profit initially fixed upon shall be determined on or before September 30, 1940."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be applicable to all contracts and subcontracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army or the Navy entered into after the approval of this act; and for complete naval vessels or any portion thereof completed in any income taxable year after the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify the provisions of the act of June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong.), entitled "An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 2464.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there has been a conflict in the law relating to the offsetting of losses in the income-tax returns of contractors for naval vessels and manufacturers of airplanes. This amendment proposes to put both the builders of naval vessels and the manufacturers of aircraft on the same basis. Briefly it permits the offsetting of losses over a period of 4 years and retains the limitation upon profits which has been fixed in recent legislation adopted by the Congress. The law as it now stands permits airplane manufacturers to offset their losses, as well as the deficiencies in profits fixed by law, over a period of 4 years with their gains over a period of 4 years. The present law, however, does not permit the builders of naval vessels to offset their deficiency in profits against their gains.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield in a moment. This provision would put both in the same position of offsetting only their losses over a period of 4 years. I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does that mean losses from contracts other than Government contracts?

Mr. WALSH. No. The law is confined solely and alone to Government contracts. The manufacturers must make a special return on Government contracts because of the original Vinson-Trammell law, which fixed a limitation of 10 percent on profits to shipbuilders and 12 percent on profits to airplane manufacturers. The law this year has reduced that profit to 7 and 8 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. What I mean is, can the shipbuilders offset, as against profits they make on naval vessels or vessels for the Maritime Commission, losses they have suffered on building for private parties?

Mr. WALSH. They cannot.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is this a bill which has just come over from the House of Representatives?

Mr. WALSH. It is a Senate bill which has been amended by the House. The bill as amended by the House retains the old rates of profit of 10 and 12 percent. It was drafted before the Senate committee and the Senate approved, and the House later approved, a reduction in those rates to 7 and 8 percent.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator reporting the bill from the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. WALSH. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KING. Ought not the bill to have gone before the Committee on Finance? That committee deals with the question of profits.

Mr. WALSH. Our jurisdiction comes from the fact that when the Vinson-Trammell bill was before the Congress in 1934, it for the first time put a limitation upon the profits of shipbuilders, partly due to the agitation in the Congress in favor of giving all shipbuilding contracts to the navy yards, and complaints made about the excess profits that shipbuilders were making. At that time a limit was placed upon the profits of shipbuilders. Later the law was extended to include airplane manufacturers; and that is the only law that puts any limitation upon the profits of anybody doing business of any kind with the Government. It is confined solely and alone to the returns which have been made since 1934 by shipbuilders and airplane manufacturers.

Mr. KING. It does not extend, then, in futuro? It relates to ex post facto transactions?

Mr. WALSH. No; the modification and change made in this bill applies only to future contracts, not to past ones; but the law has been in operation, with the old rates, since 1934.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that we note in the press and elsewhere that demands are being made for general legislation under the terms of which encouragement may be given to private capital to invest in the industries which are necessary for war purposes, it seems to me there should be some measure analagous to the one to which the Senator refers. Does not the Senator think we ought to defer consideration of this matter until that whole subject is taken up, as it must be and will be within a short time, perhaps, by the Finance Committee?

Mr. WALSH. I think it would be very unfortunate if that were done, in view of the fact that a law has recently been enacted which reduces the profits that may be made. What this amendment proposes to do is to put both kinds of manufacturers in the same position. For some reason airplane manufacturers have not had applied to them the same principle that applies to shipbuilders.

Let me illustrate. Taking for purposes of illustration a $100,000,000 contract, and assuming the rate to be 10 percent under existing law if either an airplane manufacturer or a shipbuilder lost $10,000,000 one year and the next year made $20,000,000, they would not be required to pay into the Treasury any excess profits as the $10,000,000 loss in 1 year could be offset the next year. However, if each of these manufacturers made a profit of only $5,000,000 the first year and $20,000,000 the second year, the shipbuilder would have to turn into the Treasury as excess profits under the Vinson-Trammell Act $10,000,000, while the airplane manufacturer would have to turn in only $5,000,000, as the shipbuilder under existing law cannot set off deficiencies in profit.

This bill, with amendment, I now propose, treats both of them alike and permits them to offset their losses against their profits for a period of 4 years. It does not permit them to make claim for 10-percent gains if they do not make 10-percent gains.

Let me say that I am making this motion at the suggestion of and in cooperation with the House Committee on Naval Affairs, who drafted the amendment to the Senate bill before the reduction in rates was made. If this bill is enacted without the proposed amendment, leaving aside now the question of putting them on a parity, we shall go back to the 10- and 12-percent limitations on profits when we have already reduced them to 7 and 8 percent in certain cases.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. If this bill should be enacted into law, and the Finance Committee, in the consideration of this subject in its broad aspect, should make some change in its treatment of it, would there be any reactions or repercussions disadvantageous to the interests to which the Senator now refers?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all; and undoubtedly, if the world condition should become worse than it is, and we should become involved in the European war—which we all hope will not happen—there would be an extension of this bill or some form of profit limitation, in my opinion, to all contracts made by the Government, which has been urged and advocated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is some confusion in the minds of Senators—and that includes my own mind—with respect to the scope of this amendment. Is the emergency such as to make it unwise to let this matter go over until tomorrow morning, in order that Senators may look into it?

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection at all to that course; but I repeat that the sole purpose of this bill is to put both the manufacturer of airplanes and the private shipbuilder on an excess-profits-tax parity. A claim is being made, particularly by the manufacturers of airplanes, that we ought not to take away from them their allowances for deficiencies in profits; we ought to allow them to offset their deficiencies in profits against their gains; but the Treasury Department is of the opinion that this is the wiser and better provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts and also to the Senator from Utah that I do not see that this bill involves any infringement upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance, because the bill deals merely with the matter of determining the profits to be made by airplane manufacturers and shipbuilders in determining what constitutes the 7 and 8 percent, respectively.

Mr. WALSH. And the limitation was originally adopted, in my opinion, because of agitation, when we were not building so rapidly and so numerously as now, to the effect that all ships and all airplanes ought to be built in Government-owned factories.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. WALSH. It was a concession to the group who were pressing that position that the limitation upon the profits of private shipbuilders was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the law originally enacted provided for maximum profits of 10 percent and 12 percent.

Mr. WALSH. Ten percent for shipbuilders and 12 percent for airplane manufacturers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now we have reduced those figures to 7 and 8 percent, respectively.

Mr. WALSH. Seven percent when the contract is awarded, upon a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis, and 8 percent when it is awarded, either upon a competitive basis or upon a fixed-price basis.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, 7 percent when there is a negotiated cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract, and 8 percent when there is a competitive or fixed-price contract.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the amendment offered by the Senator—which is offered here on the floor, and which none of us have had a chance to consider except by having it read—provides some of the details by which 7 and 8 percent profit may be determined, and also whether the manufacturers may claim offsets by reason of losses.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the 7 and 8 percent profits, respectively, apply only to Government contracts.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have no relationship to the profits that any concern may make for building airplanes or ships for private industry.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And any losses sustained because of private construction of ships or aircraft cannot be offset against gains made in the manufacture of Government ships or aircraft. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is absolutely correct.

The difference between the two, under the amendment adopted by the House, may be illustrated, as follows: Assume that the first year both made $5,000,000; the second year both lost $10,000,000; the third year both made $20,000,000, and the fourth year both made $15,000,000. The aircraft manufacturer, because he is allowed to take deficiencies in profit as well as losses into consideration when computing excess profits under the Vinson-Trammell Act, would not be required to turn into the Treasury as excess profits any money, while the shipbuilder, under these conditions, would be required to turn in $5,000,000 as excess profits as he is not permitted to allow for deficiencies in profit.

The amendment proposed by me would put aircraft manufacturers and shipbuilders on the same basis and neither of them would be allowed to take into consideration deficiencies in profits when computing their excess-profits tax under the Vinson-Trammell Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. The matter is a little involved, and I suggest that it go over.

Mr. WALSH. The request is a perfectly proper one, and I am glad to comply with it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I think this is a rather involved matter. Has inquiry been made of Mr. Knudsen as to its effect on the program for national defense?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; his representative appeared before the committee, not on this particular amendment but on the question of reducing the profits from 12 and 10 percent to 8 and 7 percent; and he was heard at length upon that matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the Senator's opinion that this amendment will not slow up the national-defense program at all?

Mr. WALSH. That is our opinion. Of course, it is possible that there may be a little sulking by some shipbuilders, but we have no definite evidence to justify any such conclusion.

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator knows, we have heard a great deal about excess-profits taxes; and I may say that I believe every Member of the Senate is strongly for an excess-profits tax. Senators may differ whether such a tax ought to be applied to the industries which, because of the national-defense program, will make excess profits, or whether it should be applied to every corporation and every individual that is making a normal profit and deriving no benefit from all this expenditure. In other words, it is a big question, and one on which the experts of the Treasury Department have not agreed; and, as I understand, the gentlemen who are in charge of the national-defense program do not wholly agree as to the amount of profit that is allowed by virtue of the provisions of existing law.

I thought the whole question should be studied as an entirety.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator. When the question of the general principle of an excess-profits tax is taken up, a review of the application of the tax should be studied, I agree, but I think it would be unfortunate if we did not amend the present law so as to make it apply equally to both airplane manufacturers and private shipyards.

Mr. HARRISON. I have merely this idea, that Congress is strongly for the national-defense program, and we do not want to go so far as to retard that program.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that I think due regard and respect should be given to the opinions of those to whom he has referred, but so astute are some of these interests that without the general membership of the Congress knowing it the rate of profits to airplane manufacturers on naval planes was increased about a year ago from 10 percent to 12 percent. Members of the Committee on Naval Affairs were surprised to find that in some Army bill action was taken which resulted in an increase from 10 to 12 percent in the profits of airplane manufacturers of naval planes. The Navy authorities had no knowledge and have since reported that 10 percent was causing no trouble in placing orders.

We have been moved to the action now proposed by the fact that evidence was presented to us indicating that the profits of private shipbuilders and aircraft manufacturers varied, in the year 1938, from 14 percent to 28 percent. So we felt that the time had come, considering the tremendous amount of business these industries are getting from the Government, and the sentiment of the people against large munitions profits, to modify the limit of profits, in view of the further fact that we felt that the aircraft-manufacturing industry was no longer an infant industry, as it was thought to be in the days gone by.

I suggest that the Senator from Mississippi consider the matter discussed here and confer with me about it tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentlemen in charge of this program would make a strong impression upon me if they would make their views known. I want to see the matter looked into carefully. Of course I do not want to see anyone gouged.

Mr. WALSH. So far as this amendment is concerned, that is finished, unless we repeal the law. The law today fixes the limitation of profit, as was stated by the Senator from Kentucky, at 7 percent in the case of certain types of contracts, and 8 percent in the case of other types of contracts. All the amendment does is to put both these industries in the same position in reference to offsetting losses and gains against each other over a period of 4 years.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has consented to allow the matter to go over.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter will be passed over.

The routine morning business has been concluded. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment each of the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3720. An act to create and establish a Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties; and

S. 3870. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions, etc., in the District of Columbia," approved February 23, 1905.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7233) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1935 (Public, No. 351, 74th Cong.), and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, Mr. SATTERFIELD, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message informed the Senate that Mr. ROBINSON of Utah had been appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenue from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, vice Mr. WHITE of Idaho, resigned.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of William H. Husband, of Ohio, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for a term of 6 years from July 22, 1940 (reappointment).

IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs, I report favorably sundry Army nominations, which were received by the Senate on the 3d instant. These nominations are entirely of routine character and total over 1,500 in number, and because of the large amount of printing involved, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration and confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be at once advised of the confirmations and that these names be not again printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but that proper reference be made to the pages on which the nominations appeared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

For Army nominations confirmed, see pages 9217, et seq., CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 3, 1940.)

HENRY L. STIMSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when the President of the United States sent to the Senate the nomination of Hon. Henry L. Stimson to be Secretary of War, the nomination was referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs invited Mr. Stimson to appear before it in order to obtain his views on the national defense and in order that any member of that committee or any visiting Senator might ask him any questions deemed appropriate.

On the second day of this month Mr. Stimson appeared before the committee and made a statement on the national defense and on his conception of the position of Secretary of War, after which he was questioned by members of the committee and by other Senators, not members, whom the committee was pleased to see present.

Mr. Stimson stated at the outset that our Army exists to protect from attack the territory and the rights of the United States.

He stated that we have no desire for aggression and that no one wishes to send American troops beyond our borders unless such action is absolutely necessary to the protection of the United States.

He added that he did not believe that the United States could be safely protected by what he termed "a purely passive or defensive defense," that he did not believe we would be safe from invasion if we should sit down and wait for the enemy to attack our shores, and that our forefathers had no such belief. He contended that the purpose of the Monroe Doctrine was to preserve our land and our institutions from invasion by keeping potential enemies away from this hemisphere.

He called attention to the fact that the growth in the range of modern weapons has made it necessary continually to increase the distance which must intervene between our shores and a possible enemy; that our line of defense has been pushed far out into the Atlantic Ocean, embracing Puerto Rico, Bermuda, Newfoundland, and northeastern Canada, because a powerful enemy securing a base at any of these places could launch a devastating air attack on our eastern seaboard.

He emphasized the fact that all these outlying places, except Puerto Rico, are involved in the present war and might be demanded by Germany in the event of a German victory; that Newfoundland is not even a self-governing dominion but is a Crown colony of Great Britain, which Great Britain might be forced to surrender to a triumphant opponent.

Also he pointed out that Canada, a part of the British Empire and our immediate neighbor, would be liable to the attacks of a conqueror of Great Britain, thus making 3,000 miles of unarmed American boundary a potential threat of land invasion for our country.

It was his further statement that for the first time in modern history the world is confronted by a group of nations with a foreign policy of systematized aggression against more peaceful neighbors.

He described this condition as a new peril to the world of very grave proportions, as a violation of all the principles of international law, of all the traditions and principles, moral, legal, and economic which we cherish in America.

It was his assertion that it is not reasonable to anticipate that any peace patched up with this group of aggressive nations can be anything more than the briefest kind of truce; that every reader of the press has been warned by recent reports of the coming, sooner or later, of the forceful pressure of this group of nations upon the republics of this hemisphere.

Mr. Stimson said further that a military defeat of the United States by this group of nations would not have merely transient results; that the world has known many conquerors in its history who have passed away; that they have been overthrown by opponents from without or by revolution from within; that those conquerors were not armed with modern weapons and with a systematic method of holding down their conquered nations by the effective agencies of modern science; that Genghis Khan and Attila the Hun did not possess tanks, airplanes, or modern guns and could not enforce their rules on their victims by a secret police like the Gestapo; that the patriotic uprising of our American forefathers would not have been easily successful against a dictator possessing all the expensive tanks, airplanes, and artillery in the country, and who also had a monopoly of the country's system of communication.

And then he asserted what the whole country so gravely has realized within the last few weeks, namely, that we cannot afford to fail in our effort at defense.

He added with telling force that the modern conqueror, once he gets into power, will last for a long time.

He referred again to the unprecedented peril with which this country is faced. He said he was one of the many people who after the first World War labored earnestly for disarmament and for the establishment among the nations of a system which should be based upon a reign of law rather than of force; that he regarded it as a world tragedy that such efforts resulted in failure, but that the facts had to be faced, and that we must begin again at the foundation, namely, the defense of America and its traditions of law, order, and peace.

He expressed the belief that our Government has been wise in its determination to build up our national strength to a size and character unequaled in our history.

He stated that we all recognized the shortcomings of our present powers of defense; that the President has recommended and Congress has passed appropriations for a great increase in land armament and in the size of our existing fleet; that he was in hearty sympathy with those actions, but that the making of such appropriations does not ipso facto produce either the munitions or the fleet; that their creation can be accomplished only by the cooperation of many other factors and conditions.

To what he considered as two of these factors he referred in some detail, namely, the element of time and the element of national unity and determination.

The element of time, he said, was both vital and precarious, because the preparation of a great, unarmed democratic nation to meet the emergency of a possible war involves a total reorganization of its economy and the production of an enormous quantity of intricate munitions and armaments of a character with which its factories and businesses are unacquainted, this requiring an incredible amount of time. He observed that we got some inkling of this 23 years ago, but that the conditions governing the task today are entirely different from what they were then.

He proceeded to say that then we were able to train at our leisure and to arm ourselves at our leisure; that we purchased the arms which we actually used almost entirely from France and Britain; that during the time of our preparation we were protected by the overwhelming sea power of those two nations and by the unbroken defense line of France; that today the French defense line has been broken; that France has been conquered, and that the sea power of Great Britain seems to be trembling in the balance.

Continuing on this phase of the subject, he said that today the time which we will have for our rearmament is very largely dependent on the preservation of Great Britain's control of the North Atlantic; that under these conditions any assistance which we can safely give toward the preservation of that sea power in the North Atlantic is a step most important and vital to our own preparation for an effective system of defense; that the President and Congress recognized this fact when the former recommended and the latter enacted last autumn the repeal of the automatic arms embargo; that he believes the President and Congress are right and that he has publicly so stated on a number of occasions; that the situation today is much more critical than it was last autumn, and that the time which can be saved by the existence of British sea power is much more precious to us now than then.

Proceeding to the consideration of the second factor in his view vitally necessary to successful rearmament, he said that this second factor consisted in the arousal of a national spirit which will grasp the emergency and be willing to make the sacrifice and the effort involved in carrying out the program in the shortest possible time; and that the first and most effective step toward the arousal of such a spirit, as well as toward the carrying out of the program itself, would, in his opinion, be the prompt enactment of a statute establishing a system of selective compulsory training and service. He gave it as his view that such a statute is imperatively required at this moment to secure the men necessary to meet the required strength of our present peacetime Military Establishment; that there has been a practical failure of the ordinary methods of recruiting during the last 4½ months to bring the Regular Army to its peacetime strength; that this statute is also imperatively needed to raise the men necessary for the larger program of emergency defense, including the air force, which the President recently recommended and which Congress has already authorized.

He asserted that the passage of such a statute would at once bring home to every citizen the critical nature of the emergency which threatens us and the need of his own personal support in meeting it; that such a statute would profoundly benefit the morale of the Nation, would promote its unification in this time of danger, and thus would be a powerful stimulus toward speeding up the effort to rearm.

He alluded to the fact that he had been a close personal witness of such an effect by such a statute by reason of having become a member of the Seventy-seventh Division in the World War, a division which was raised in the city of New York under the Selective Service Act of 1917. He related that in point of racial origin that division was probably the most varied in the United States; that the battalion which he commanded in that division contained men of some 30 different racial stocks; that the growth of the spirit of national unity and of the common spirit of service which he personally witnessed in that division and which eventually made that division one of the most successful combatant units of the American Army in France has been an inspiration to him throughout his life.

Nearing the end of his opening statement Mr. Stimson said that he had given this outline of his views in order that his beliefs and the spirit he would try to put into the work of the national defense might be known.

He stated it was his belief that we are facing a grave national emergency fraught with the possibility of immediate peril.

Replying to charges by certain critics that he was a war monger or an interventionist, he said that for the last 12 years, ever since he became Secretary of State—in which position he served from 1929 to 1933—he had been continually active for peace between the nations and had devoted much of his time to the problem of peace.

He stated that, if confirmed, he would devote himself strictly and exclusively to the duties of Secretary of War.

Following his initial statement, Mr. Stimson was questioned at some length by members of the committee and by visiting Senators, but the substance of his introductory discussion was not discredited.

I have given almost literally what Mr. Stimson said in his general statement before the committee, because it is my judgment that in this way the Senate can best obtain an intimate view of his attitude toward the national defense and the position of Secretary of War.

It is true that he is one of the most prominent members of the Republican Party and has served with marked distinction and outstanding efficiency as a Republican Secretary of War and as a Republican Secretary of State.

It is true that he possesses exceptional ability and a profound devotion to the principle of democracy.

It is not on these grounds alone, however, that his appointment should be confirmed.

For it is true that numbers of other men in both the great political parties have held positions equally exalted and are his equals in intellect and hold the principle of democracy in equal reverence.

The value and the significance of his appointment by a Democratic President in what may prove to be one of the most tragic periods in the annals of this Nation lie in the fact that it is notice to the world of the fundamental unity of the American people.

Such notice could not have come at a more appropriate time.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, in tendering Cabinet assignments to Henry L. Stimson and Frank Knox, members of a party not his own, in a crisis imperiling the America we know and love, has shown a steadfast and a true Americanism.

Henry L. Stimson and Frank Knox, in accepting these assignments under such conditions at the hands of a President belonging to a party not their own, have shown a similar loyalty to American ideals.

The defense of this Nation is the defense of human freedom.

In the cause of that defense all parties, factions, sections, creeds, and races become a brotherhood that will never surrender; a brotherhood that will never die.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish briefly to state the reasons which control my vote in connection with the confirmation of Hon. Henry L. Stimson as Secretary of War. The statement will clearly indicate why I sharply distinguish between the Stimson case and that of Col. Frank Knox, the nominee for Secretary of the Navy.

In both instances I specifically exclude from my verdict any political considerations. They would be unworthy of us in the crisis in which we find ourselves. I wish to deal solely with the life-and-death factors which relate to the imperative need that we shall keep the United States out of the war abroad and the effect which these nominations may have upon these factors. This objective transcends politics, friendship, or any other considerations. I may say parenthetically that Colonel Knox is one of my oldest and most deeply cherished friends—a citizen of indisputable devotion to his country.

I can confine myself to a discussion of the Stimson case because it will carry over an obvious conclusion in the Knox case insofar as the Stimson factors are involved.

Mr. Stimson, like Colonel Knox, is an eminent American with a brilliant record of previous public service. His patriotism, his conscience, his integrity, and his capacities are above reproach. His earnest devotion to what he believes to be the best welfare of his country in the present dark moment in its history ought to be unquestioned. He has my deepest respect. None of these things is in issue so far as I am concerned.

I am concerned solely with what Mr. Stimson's confirmation as Secretary of War implies in respect to the war policies of this Government. If the Stimson viewpoint is an interventionist viewpoint which would urge policies that do not stop "short of war"—as the favorite phrase describing our national objective has it—then a vote to confirm him in the presence of such proofs is a vote reflecting a congressional willingness to accept such ominous policies. We might be morally foreclosed from subsequently complaining against the event itself. We might, as a result, either shackle our own subsequent freedom of action or tragically mislead the European powers with which we deeply sympathize into reliance upon an ultimate aid which might not be forthcoming.

Speaking for myself, I am unable and unwilling to be put in the position of endorsing any policies which, in my own opinion, could invite, if not actually precipitate, our early entry into the European war. That, Mr. President, is precisely the situation which I face in the Senate at this moment.

I concede to the Chief Executive the normal right to select his own official family. It is scarcely to be expected that his selection would be the same as mine. But I am unable to consider the circumstances in the Stimson case as normal. I am unable to disassociate the Senate's action on a nominee for Secretary of War in this emergency from Senate endorsement of the peace or war policies of the nominee. He will succeed a Secretary of War who appears to have been separated from the Cabinet because he did not see eye to eye with the President regarding the way the War Department ought to be run and the way our foreign policy ought to function in connection with the Allied cause in Europe. Therefore it follows that the choice of his successor must be intended to harmonize with the mind of the Chief Executive and to personify the American attitudes which lie ahead. Thus it becomes vital to explore certain explicit statements made by Mr. Stimson in respect to foreign policy just 24 hours before he was appointed Secretary of War. The sequence is too striking to be ignored. If I cannot approve his statements, then, under the circumstances, I cannot approve his nomination.

I now come to the statements themselves.

By the courtesy of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, of which I do not have the honor to be a member, I was permitted to quiz Mr. Stimson about these statements when he appeared as a witness last Tuesday. I regret to say that he could not clear them up, at least, not to my own satisfaction; and, despite my clear and unequivocal sympathy with the victims of aggression abroad, I believe it is my duty to give our noninvolvement in the war abroad the benefit of every doubt.

Mind you, this has nothing to do with the question whether or not we should "help Britain short of entering the war ourselves," limited by our own defense needs, our own laws, and our international engagements. It does not involve our incorrigible purpose to enforce the Monroe Doctrine. Under the actions of Congress during the last 9 months, I accept these objections and go forward with them. But the question now pending goes infinitely further. It crowds its way into the deepest pits of war itself. It involves policies which, if adopted "immediately"—and Mr. Stimson's recommendation is that they be adopted "immediately"—would immediately threaten to bring the war to the United States and to fling us in. That is the point at which I cannot and shall not go along. Regardless of their sympathies and their willingness to give arm's length help to those with whom they sympathize, the American people want no actual American involvement in the war, unless the defense of our own homeland and its essential outposts is at stake. They certainly do not want it "immediately," and they certainly would overwhelmingly oppose any policies which would either invite any such calamity or hasten it by a single hour.

But what is Mr. Stimson's view? Just 24 hours before he was appointed Secretary of War—and the time element is utterly significant—Mr. Stimson publicly recommended that we shall immediately—

> Throw open all our ports to the British and French naval and merchant marine for all repairs and refueling and other services.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator give the date of that statement?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was the day before he was nominated to be Secretary of War.

Mr. BARKLEY. But what was the date?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot give the Senator the exact date.

Mr. TAFT. He was nominated on the 20th of June, and I think the statement was made on the 18th of June.

Mr. VANDENBERG. On the 18th of June.

Mr. Stimson himself admits that this is an "unneutral act." That is his phrase. He questions, rather vaguely, in his examination, whether it is or is not an act of war. Beyond certain well-defined and highly restricted permissions, it is clearly a violation of our own international engagements, if it contemplates any reality of aid, as it obviously does. In my own view, it would be a direct invitation to bring the war to "all our ports." I am opposed to any such invitation or result. I have no interest in arguing the intricacies and techniques of international law in this connection. I sympathize with those who say that we dare not rely upon international law when today's conquesting dictators have reduced it to a shambles. But this is not a question of our "reliance" on international law. It is a question of our own status, under our own previous interpretations of our own rights and obligations, if and when we, too, ignore and violate and abandon international law.

It is a practical question. What happens if we open "all our ports"—Mr. Stimson's phrase—to belligerent ships for all repairs and refueling and other services? It seems to me that under our own definitions we join the belligerents and we invite the consequences. In effect, we have gone to war.

If we are going into this war, Mr. President, let it be the deliberative judgment of the whole American Congress; and let it be total war—which, however, may God forbid.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I prefer to finish my statement, when I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator. But Mr. Stimson, in his testimony, was not even clear that any congressional function at all would be involved in the determination of this policy against which I complain; and he certainly did not dissent from accepting the hazard which I believe to be implicit in his proposition.

Even on the basis of his own thesis, namely, that he wants to keep British opposition to Hitler alive long enough to give us time to prepare ourselves for ultimate eventualities, if any—and that, by the way, is clearly to our self-interest—even on the basis of his own thesis it seems to me that his proposition is wrong, because, in practice, it would precipitate rather than postpone our own crisis. We certainly cannot keep out of this war by bringing it to "all our ports."

I call particular attention to the fact—and it is highly significant of the different attitude of Colonel Knox—that the pending nominee for Secretary of the Navy disagrees with the pending nominee for Secretary of War. I find Knox making this statement:

> I should think we would have to intern every British warship that comes into our ports.

While that is not literally true, since belligerent ships have certain extremely temporary and limited rights of sanctuary, yet it reflects the general viewpoint which I urge as our own necessity unless we are ready for war itself.

The menace—to us—in departing from basic insulations and detachments to keep America out of actual involvement in this fast-moving tragedy abroad is sternly demonstrated in another phase by paralleling Mr. Stimson's advice with the facts of this war during the fortnight since the advice was given. Mr. Stimson said we should immediately "throw open all our ports to the British and French naval and merchant marine." A few days later France collapsed. Then a few more days later the British attacked the French fleet in their north African port. It was one of the major battles of the war. Under the Stimson policy, that battle could have been fought in New York Harbor or any other American port.

Mr. Stimson presented a second proposition in that historic broadcast 24 hours before the President embraced him. He said we should send "planes and other munitions"—which, mind you, are unconditional contraband of war—to Britain and France "if necessary in our own ships and under convoy."

That, Mr. President, would mean the complete negation of our own existing law—and I mean the amended law upon which the President and a great congressional majority are standing in respect both to neutrality and to aid for the Allies short of war. It would strike down every principle upon which we have predicated our own detachment ever since hostilities began. It would load American ships, which are prohibited by our own law from any participation in such traffic, with American munitions, which are unconditional contraband in any language, and send them into foreign combat zones, where our own law prohibits them from going, convoyed by the American Navy, which obviously would be intended to resist attack. I can think of nothing more flagrantly provocative. Even if an enemy were scrupulously to observe all requirements of inquiry and search, it would clearly have the right of challenge and capture under the indicated circumstances; and the presence of an American naval convoy could imply only that the American Navy would resist the exercise of this right. That would be war—and we would be in it.

I can think of no way in which we could more deliberately ask for trouble, or be surer of just such an incident as would leave the American Congress with no real freedom of action and no alternative but to say "yes" when subsequently besought by the Executive for a declaration of war. I am unwilling and unable to put myself in any such position; and I do not believe the American people, despite their overwhelming sentiments and anxieties in behalf of what is known as the Allied cause, are willing to be put in any such position.

Again I call attention to the significant fact that the pending nominee for Secretary of the Navy disagrees with the pending nominee for Secretary of War upon this score. Colonel Knox is quoted as follows when speaking against convoys:

> It would mean war. A convoyed ship is subject to attack without criticism.

We are not afraid to fight. We are not too proud to fight. If any alien conqueror were to mistake our prudence for resignation and submission, he would be sadly disillusioned if the defense of the Americas becomes the stake. This is a totally different question. It confines itself to the maintenance of an American status which does not precipitate us against our conscious will into a present war which few among us, despite our sentiments, are willing to have America enter. Eternal and relentless vigilance is the price of our immunity and of our relative peace. There is a line we must not cross unless and until we are deliberately and consciously ready and willing to cross it in full force and with every resource at our command.

Mr. President, I have no idea that the presence of Mr. Stimson at his desk as Secretary of War would automatically precipitate eventualities. That is not the point. He has made it plain to the Senate committee that he, too, wishes, if possible, to avoid involving America in actual conflict overseas unless he conceives it to be essential to our national defense. I expressly exclude myself from any criticism which would define him as a warmonger. But I cannot accept his naive suggestion that his views on these subjects are of no moment because, as he says, it will be the President and not he who decides policies, and that he is only an administrator. He is also an advisor to the President, particularly intended and expected to give advice regarding war and defense. He will rightfully be a very persuasive adviser because of his high credentials. Therefore, his viewpoint on intervention becomes critically important. His state of mind becomes controlling. It is a symbol. I would not guess at his state of mind. I would not resolve my doubts against him in the presence of specific proof of willingness to go far beyond so-called methods short of war. That is the difference—at least respecting these specific issues—between this case and that of Colonel Knox. Mr. Stimson has given us the specific proof. He volunteered it to the American people over the radio 24 hours before he was suddenly chosen by the President to be Secretary of War. He does not shun methods that would swiftly take us into war. Indeed, in one vital instance he asks for these methods immediately.

The Stimson and Knox hearings were held simultaneously. I could not attend both. I do not know the full Knox record. My vote in his case will depend upon the disclosures in this debate. At least, however, as regards my specific objections to the Stimson policies, I can say that the Knox attitudes in these particular instances agree with my own, despite some of his general interventionist enthusiasms in other directions. I am frank to say that the verdict of the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee will have great weight with me upon this score because his general anti-intervention views entirely parallel my own.

But the Stimson case is different. It rests squarely upon indisputable evidence.

I cannot separate my vote on Mr. Stimson from a vote on what Mr. Stimson represents in this moment of desperate importance to the peace and security of the United States. I cannot give him a vote of confidence in what he thus represents. Therefore I cannot give him a vote of confirmation.

Mr. VANDENBERG subsequently said: Mr. President, when I was speaking earlier in the afternoon I referred to two particular propositions which Mr. Stimson has submitted by way of recommendations as to the national program he would pursue if he had his way. In each instance questions of international law are involved. I took the trouble to submit both questions to the greatest living American authority on the subject, John Bassett Moore. I have Mr. Moore's reply in memorandum form. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and I ask that it be placed immediately following my previous remarks upon this matter.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAGAPONACK, LONG ISLAND, N. Y., July 5, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: I am availing myself of my first opportunity to answer your telegram of July 3. The first question concerning which you inquire is whether we could, without violating our duties as a neutral under international law, "throw open all our ports to the British and French Naval and Merchant Marine for all repairs and refueling and other services." Since your telegram was sent, this question seems to have been answered by the British so far as concerns French naval ships, with which, according to reports in the press, the British have been so dealing that they will not again reach the high seas, much less the ports of the United States. In other respects the question answers itself, unless the entire law of neutrality, as many persons here seem to desire, has also ceased to exist.

The question whether a country may, without violating its duties as a neutral, be at one and the same time both neutral and unneutral, or, in other words, be both a participant in the war and not a participant in it, by the simple process of calling itself neutral, hardly seems to be susceptible of serious discussion. Among the neutrality proclamations of the United States, that which was issued by President Grant on August 22, 1870, on the outbreak of war between France and the North German Confederation and its allies has been taken as a model. The full text of this proclamation is printed at pages 1007–1010, Volume 7 of my Digest of International Law. Among the things it prohibits is the "fitting out and arming, or attempting to fit out and arm, or procuring to be fitted out and armed, or knowingly being concerned in the furnishing, fitting out, or arming of any ship or vessel with intent that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of either of the said belligerents." These and analogous inhibitions are amplified and detailed in subsequent clauses of the proclamation.

Probably the duties of a neutral government were never better expressed than in the instructions which President Roosevelt, on the outbreak of war between Russia and Japan in 1904, caused to be issued to "all officials of the Government, civil, military, and naval," in which it was enjoined upon them "to abstain from either action or speech which can legitimately cause irritation to either of the combatants" and to this he added the following admonition:

"It is always unfortunate to bring Old World antipathies and jealousies into our life, or by speech or conduct to excite anger and resentment toward our Nation in friendly foreign lands; but in a Government employee, whose official position makes him in some sense the representative of the people, the mischief of such actions is greatly increased. A strong and self-confident nation should be peculiarly careful not only of the rights but of the susceptibility of its neighbors; and nowadays all the nations of the world are neighbors one to the other. Courtesy, moderation, and self-restraint should mark international, no less than private, intercourse."

So far as concerns the supply of arms and ammunition to a belligerent, international law has always permitted the private citizens of a neutral country to sell and ship them to a belligerent, subject to the exercise of the belligerent right to capture them on the high seas and condemn and appropriate them. The proclamation of President Grant, to which I have already referred, recited that, while the laws of the United States did not interfere with "the free expression of opinion and sympathy," or with the open manufacture or sale of arms or munitions as above stated, they nevertheless imposed "upon all persons who may be within their territory and jurisdiction the duty of an impartial neutrality" during the existence of the war to which the proclamation related.

In February 1936 Senator JOHNSON, of California, presented to the Committee on Foreign Relations a statement of mine which was published under the title "Pending Neutrality Proposals—Their False Conceptions and Misunderstandings." As it discusses generally the subject of neutrality and contains various passages directly bearing upon your present telegram, I enclose a copy of a reprint of it, which was made at the time for general circulation.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN BASSETT MOORE.

[Enclosure.]

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the appointment of Col. Henry L. Stimson is an unusual appointment at an unusual time. We all realize from its nature that the appointment of Colonel Stimson was made at a particular time for a particular purpose. It was not an appointment to fill a voluntary vacancy. It was an appointment to fill an enforced vacancy as the result of the firing of Gov. Harry Woodring.

Governor Woodring certainly was qualified by party affiliation to be in the Cabinet. Certainly he was loyal to the administration through 7 years of experience as an official. He is a former Governor of his State, and a man against whom I am sure no one—at least, on the floor of the Senate—has said a word of condemnation. In plain American language, he was fired. He was fired by the President of the United States for reasons which the President himself knows. His letter of resignation, which was not voluntary, was not made public because it was "too personal," according to the White House.

In the newspapers there appeared a statement attributed to Governor Woodring which I do not intend to discuss at any length. I, of course, cannot say that it is true, because I was not present when it is said to have been made, but it has not been denied by the Governor. This is the statement—it has been made on the floor of the Senate before, but I think it is worth while to put it in the RECORD here:

> There is a comparatively small clique of international financiers who want the United States to declare war and get into the European mess with everything we have, including our manpower. They don't like me because I am against stripping our own defenses for the sake of trying to stop Hitler 3,000 miles away. Eventually they will force me to resign.

Those are the very important words of a responsible member of the President's Cabinet, and to this day no denial of their truth has been made by anyone. Therefore one must come to the conclusion that Mr. Woodring was pushed out of the Cabinet because he would not take orders, because he would not "strip our own defenses for the sake of trying to stop Hitler 3,000 miles away," according to the press. He is quoted as saying that a small clique is interested in actual involvement, sending boys to Europe, and that he was not for that policy and that he would be fired.

Two weeks ago I said on the floor of the Senate that the difference was that Governor Woodring wanted to aid the Allies in everything short of war within the law, and that was not satisfactory to the administration, and therefore he was forced from the Cabinet; and the natural conclusion is that if he was forced from the Cabinet, his successor as Secretary of War would be one who would do what the administration wanted done. If not, why change?

WHY WAS WOODRING FIRED?

Why was Governor Woodring fired? He was fired because he would not "go along." Certainly the President would appoint someone who would "go along" with his viewpoint. That is just common-sense logic. It is not necessary to know anything behind the scenes to know that. We know the fact is that at this particular time the President wanted in his Cabinet those who would follow exclusively his viewpoint on foreign affairs. Colonel Knox said before the Naval Affairs Committee that he and the President had discussed the subject and they were in agreement. I do not know whether or not Colonel Stimson discussed it with the President; but the fact is that Harry Woodring was fired, and in his place was named Henry L. Stimson. Why was an interventionist named?

THE PRESIDENT AND THE SUPREME COURT

Of course, this is a minor point, and I do not intend to discuss it long; but shortly after I came to the Senate the President of the United States sent to the Senate a message in which he discussed the Supreme Court of the United States.

He was going to change the whole face of the Supreme Court. Now, let us be honest: He was going to "pack" the Supreme Court. How was he going to pack it? By replacing on the Supreme Court all those who had passed the age of 70. That was the way by which he would accomplish the change. Colonel Stimson is approximately 73. I am not saying that he is beyond the age of service; but the President of the United States, as an excuse for asking us to change the Supreme Court of the United States, made this statement in his message, and I quote him:

Modern complexities call also for a constant infusion of new blood in the courts, just as it is needed in executive functions of the Government and in private business.

May I repeat that?

Modern complexities call also for a constant infusion of new blood in the courts—

And this is the point I want you to get—just as it is needed in executive functions of the Government and in private business.

Yet the President appoints a man who is beyond the age of 70, not in the place he mentioned in this message, but in the place that he uses as a comparison, where young blood is needed. Certainly the Secretary of War would be an executive function of government. Let me say that I do not agree with the President in regard to men 70 years of age; but it is quite unusual that he reverses himself to appoint Colonel Stimson in spite of this reason he advanced for his reorganization of the judiciary. This is what he said, and I again quote the President:

A lowered mental or physical vigor leads men to avoid an examination of complicated and changed conditions. Little by little, new facts become blurred through old glasses fitted, as it were, for the needs of another generation—

Those are the words of the President, speaking about those who have passed the age of 70, and let me again note that Colonel Stimson is approximately 73 years of age.

I continue with the quotation from the President:

Older men, assuming that the scene is the same as it was in the past, cease to explore or inquire into the present or the future.

And then he goes on to make this statement:

A constant and systematic addition of younger blood will vitalize the courts and better equip them to recognize and apply the essential concepts of justice in the light of the needs and the facts of an ever-changing world.

THE PRESIDENT REVERSES POSITION

But did the President follow that philosophy in the appointment of Colonel Stimson? No; he completely reversed himself; and at an unusual time, when we need the vigor and drive of which he speaks, he appoints a man far beyond the age of which he complained, and on account of which he wanted to change the entire judicial structure of the United States.

If the President was sincere when he made that statement, why does he today, by his appointment of this man, fly right in the face of the statement he made when he wanted to change the Supreme Court of the United States? He cannot be right both times. He can decide, in his own conscience, which time he was right; or is it just nice to be different, depending upon the circumstances that are involved?

As I say, however, that is a minor feature in the discussion of Colonel Stimson. There are very, very many more important things in this unusual appointment of Colonel Stimson. I shall discuss Colonel Stimson's record. Later on I shall tell you what President Roosevelt himself, when he was Governor of New York, said about Colonel Stimson. Was Colonel Stimson a different man then? We shall let the President decide which time he was telling the people the real truth about the colonel.

What is the record of Colonel Stimson? I shall not go back too far, because I might get back in the age of the "blurred glasses" of which the President speaks. But what is the record of Colonel Stimson on the World War? Let us see if he has been bellicose all his life. Let us see what his record has been relative to the involvement of America in wars abroad. Let us see what his viewpoint is on intervention, not today, but through 25 years of interest in involvement.

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE

We all know of the work of the National Security League preceding the last World War. I think it was the thirty-first; this is the thirty-second world war; but in the last World War we found the National Security League of New York City becoming a very strong arm in propagandizing America for our involvement in that conflict in 1917. It was used and known by Wellington House, and by Masterman, and by Parker, and others, as a very important part in the propaganda drive to get America involved in the World War. Colonel Stimson was in the National Security League; so it is not just because of late conversion that Colonel Stimson has been interested in the involvement of American boys in the battles across the sea.

The activities of the National Security League have been recalled by many writers of the pre-war days. It was swamped with lavish contributions, according to Millis. Professor Peterson speaks of its use in getting the country ready for war spirit.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am wondering whether this is the National Security League the officers of which were recommended for prosecution by the House of Representatives after an investigation the report of which covered two large volumes. If my recollection serves me correctly, after an investigation by a congressional committee, there was a recommendation that the officials of that league be prosecuted.

Mr. HOLT. I would not be at all surprised. I cannot answer the Senator because I do not know, but I do know that Colonel Stimson was active and an active speaker for the National Security League in order to involve America in the war in 1917. At that time, no doubt, he said, "Help the Allies with everything short of manpower." No doubt he said that at that time, as he does today.

It is the same old call of 1916, and it means the same finish unless we are on guard. The same slogans brushed up are used; the same reasons for involvement are given. We are supposed to have short memories and forget.

The colonel was active for conscription in 1916, before America entered the World War. Before we went into the war Colonel Stimson was an active interventionist, and active for conscription, and asked for compulsory military training. The records of his speeches and comments so prove.

COUDERT AND STIMSON TRAVEL IN WEST

Here is an interesting point. I have discussed on the floor of the Senate who Frederic R. Coudert was. He was the man who recently called a meeting which was responsible for the Committee To Defend America by Aiding the Allies. Much of his record has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and more will be, but I wish to remind those who are now listening to me that Frederic Coudert was the legal adviser of the British Embassy preceding our entrance and during the involvement of America in the World War. That is who Frederic Coudert was. Why do I mention that in connection with Colonel Stimson at this time? It is because of the fact that the New York Times records that Colonel Stimson and Frederic Coudert traveled over the western part of the United States to get America ready for the World War in 1917, and an examination of the files of the New York Times will so indicate.

Why did they travel in the western part of the United States? Why did Frederic Coudert, who was on the pay roll of the English Government, travel with Henry L. Stimson in the West preceding our entrance into the World War? Was it because Sir Gilbert Parker had reported to the English Government that the West was not ready for war "as yet," and that they needed a lot of work in the West in order to get the western part of the United States ready for actual involvement, for intervention in the war? Therefore we find Colonel Stimson traveling in the western part of the United States before our entrance into the World War, with a representative of the British Government, one who today is very active in the United States for our intervention in this war. They were traveling in the West in order to get America interested in going into the World War, not in 1940, but in 1917.

Mr. President, those things are forgotten by many, but they show a trend. They show the record of a man who is today appointed in unusual circumstances, in an important time, to the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

ADVOCATED SENDING TROOPS

Do my colleagues realize that Colonel Henry Stimson, the man who was appointed by President Roosevelt to his Cabinet, advocated sending our American boys to Europe before we went into the war in 1917? Oh, it may be said that that is just a statement, but I ask Senators to refer to his speech before New York Uniyersity, prior to our declaration of war in 1917, and they will see that Colonel Stimson said, according to newspaper reports, at that time that it was—to quote him—"our duty to send troops abroad." That was before America actually was involved in that terrible and costly adventure in the wars of Europe. So again I say, Colonel Stimson's record is not one of peace, but is one of war. I shall amplify that as I proceed during the discussion of the nomination. But I think the Senate should have these facts in order to know the background of the man who, out of all the eligible and able people of this country, the President has appointed to be Secretary of War.

STIMSON AGAINST PEACE PROPOSAL

While I myself was young at the time, I have since brushed up my mind a little on the history of the time of the World War, but many of my colleagues will recall that in 1916 President Wilson advocated establishing peace in Europe. In December 1916 he caused a peace proposal to be sent by Secretary of State Lansing to the countries at war. President Wilson made that effort. But whom do we find opposing his peace proposal at that time? Do we find Colonel Stimson? Yes; we do find Colonel Stimson. The next day after President Wilson had initiated a peace objective in Europe to stop the conflict then raging, even before we were in the war, what was Colonel Stimson's viewpoint? I quote from the New York Times of December 22, 1916, and in so doing I wish to say that the New York Times in the article showed only three men who opposed President Wilson's trying to establish peace in Europe in 1916. Two of those three are now members of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, and the third is Maurice Leon, who stated that we have an obligation to enter the present war. Colonel Stimson was one of these three men who objected.

Let me, for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, read the words of Colonel Stimson protesting against President Wilson's peace message in 1916. This is what Colonel Stimson said:

> I believe that the President has made a grave mistake. In his message he states: "The objects which the statesmen of the belligerents on both sides have in mind in this war are virtually the same." In other words, that there is no real issue in the war. I cannot conceive an error more profound.

This is Colonel Stimson speaking, not of this war, but he uses the same language as to this war that he used as to the war in 1917. This is what Colonel Stimson said:

> I do not believe there ever were issues more fundamental in any war of history.

Get that. That referred to the war of 1917. Is his judgment any better today?

> I do not believe there ever were issues more fundamental in any war of history.

Today he says this war has the same fundamental moral issues, of which he spoke in almost identical words in 1916. Then Colonel Stimson continued:

> Nor is there in the world a nation more deeply interested than America to have those issues rightly decided.

"Rightly decided." The President asked a peace conference; he wanted the countries to sit down around the table and discuss peace, but Colonel Stimson was against that; he wanted it rightly decided. In other words he wanted a war to the finish. No other conclusion can logically follow. Why would it not have been better to decide it rightly around a peace table 2 years before the final armistice? Then he said:

> There is no nation whose ideals, institutions, and interests would be more vitally affected than America if the "blood and iron" policy of Bismarck should become an established creed among the nations of the earth.

I ask Senators to read Colonel Stimson's viewpoint for intervention in this war and compare it with the statement he made in 1916, when he was opposing President Wilson, who was trying to get a peace conference and settle these issues, which were not settled at Versailles, and today are plaguing the nations of the world.

We all know that if the issue could have been settled around a peace table, thousands of lives, yes, millions, would have been saved, and the world would not have been suffering today the economic collapse it is now experiencing and has experienced for 10 years. But Colonel Stimson protested against President Wilson's efforts, because he said that we should decide it rightly, not by peace, but, by the logic of his statement, by war to the finish.

When he sits in the Cabinet of the President of the United States—and I do not think anyone doubts he will sit there, we know he will, we know that without question—the people will have a right to know the background of Colonel Stimson, and when he sits in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, will he be one who will protest against any peace offensive, and say that this war should go through until it is rightly decided, a war to the finish? He protested in 1916 against President Wilson's move and I have no doubt in the world that he wants this a war to the finish in 1940. I could continue to discuss that, but I have no desire to hold the Senate by any lengthy discussion of that point.

Colonel Stimson traveled through the West with a paid English representative in order to drum up sentiment in America in that war. Whether he did it sincerely, whether he did it honestly is not the question. The point is that he did travel through the west with a counselor of the English Embassy to get sentiment to involve America in the war in 1917, the war which caused thousands of American boys to be killed on the battlefields of Europe. Those boys from the United States, and thousands more are today suffering as the result of that war.

Yes, let us hurriedly dismiss that if we can. However, it was shown that Colonel Stimson was active for intervention by us then, 25 years ago; whether his purpose was sincere or insincere is not the question. His record shows that he favors intervention, his record shows he favors involvement, his record shows his interest in European affairs that involved America itself in the war.

STIMSON AND NICARAGUA

The next point I desire to discuss is that of Colonel Stimson and Nicaragua. Of course, some Senators feel that we should not bring these things up. Let those things be forgotten. This, however, is no time to let such things be forgotten, when perhaps the lives of American boys are at stake.

Here we are discussing whether we shall confirm an appointee to the Cabinet of the United States, a man who actually passes upon decisions of the President, or at least with whom the President consults with respect to such decisions. We all know that Colonel Stimson was sent to Nicaragua in 1927. Our activity in that country is one of the black marks in American history. What was Stimson sent there for? I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that time, volume 74, part 4, page 4530, as follows:

> Mr. FRENCH. Colonel Stimson, before he became Secretary of State, was sent to Nicaragua by President Coolidge to assist in working out some sort of stable government about 4 years ago. We are all familiar with that.

Yes, America is very familiar with Colonel Stimson setting up a stable government in Nicaragua in 1927 and thereafter. I regret to say our activity there is one of the extremely black marks of American history. Colonel Stimson, when he was sent down in 1927, agreed to do what? What was agreed? Not that the Nicaraguan army or that Nicaraguan guards should be in charge of the elections in Nicaragua, but that the United States marines would be sent down there to see that elections were taken care of properly, and that the right government would be in control. That was the agreement with the government at that time. But Senators may say, "Of course, that had been done before." Of course it had. But Colonel Stimson acquiesced in it, and established the control of Nicaragua as truly as anything was established. And later when he became Secretary of State he continued the policy of keeping the United States marines in Nicaragua in order that the Nicaraguan people might have good government—good, depending upon the view of the administration; good, if the investments were protected.

Why do I mention these things, Because today we are confronted with the proposition that perhaps in South America, perhaps in Central America, there may be other revolutions similar to that in Nicaragua in those days. We hope not, but it is a possibility. Will Colonel Stimson again advocate the sending of United States marines to those countries in order that there might be stable government in South America and in Central America? His record shows that he favored such action.

Mr. President, it is not I who says these things, but the former majority leader of the Senate, the late Senator Joe Robinson, of Arkansas. On February 24, 1931, he placed a letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which read, in part, as follows:

Mr. Stimson is a partisan politician; otherwise he would not make the United States Government ridiculous in the eyes of the world by trying to blow hot and cold with one and the same breath.

Senator Robinson's words are "make the United States Government ridiculous in the eyes of the world." We know about Nicaragua and we know about the agreement that was entered into with respect to the elections there. I do not want to present my viewpoint about it at this time. Let us take the viewpoint of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate and see what he said. Speaking in 1931, here is what the Senator from Nevada said:

I am talking about the Secretary—

Mr. President, in this statement the Senator from Nevada refers to the policy of Colonel Stimson. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read all of his remarks. However, I do wish to read a portion of them.

I am talking about the Secretary—

What Secretary? Colonel Stimson—

and I will now conclude. The troops did not go where American citizens were alone to protect them; they went where there were no American citizens and where there was nothing but fighting forces of the Chamorro Government, and those opposed to it, for the purpose of creating zones which had the effect, if they were not intended to have the effect, of absolutely protecting the revolutionary government of Chamorro.

That is what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] said about the conduct of Colonel Stimson in Nicaragua; that troops were sent there not to protect American citizens but for what purpose?

For the purpose of creating zones which had the effect, if they were not intended to have the effect, of absolutely protecting the revolutionary government of Chamorro.

Today if there is any outstanding problem for America it is south of the border. And we are naming a man to the Cabinet who has this record with respect to Nicaragua. We know that our hope for good will in America is not imperialism or intervention such as that used in Nicaragua.

Senators may say that American investments were involved. Let me read a statement from the New Haven Journal Courier as follows:

According to the estimates rendered in answer to a request from Congressman COCHRAN, the American investment as of January 1, 1932, in Nicaragua was $15,648,700; the cost of maintenance of marines in that country since 1927, above the expense to maintain them here, had been $6,076,034. Thus, to safeguard American business investments, the United States Government has spent two-fifths of the total of those investments.

Did Colonel Stimson go to Nicaragua to establish American imperialism in Nicaragua and to force the collection of American bonds and American investments?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the Senator would be willing to return to the statement he made concerning the National Security League and the connection that has with the discussion in the Senate today. Does the Senator connect Colonel Stimson with the National Security League?

Mr. HOLT. I did connect him with that league at that time; yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In what manner?

Mr. HOLT. He was a member of the National Security League at that time, and was one of its speakers in 1916.

Mr. LUNDEEN. He was a member of the league and one of its speakers?

Mr. HOLT. Yes. I wish I could repeat the words used by the late distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, the great Robert La Follette, in speaking of the National Security League. But if Senators want to see a group of typical dollar-a-year men they ought to check the National Security League as it was composed at that time.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the Senator permit me for a moment to refer to the hearings of the House of Representatives in 1918, on House Resolution 469 and House Resolution 476, beginning on December 19, 1918, and printed by the Government Printing Office? The hearings were held with respect to the National Security League before a special committee of the House of Representatives, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, to investigate and make report as to the officers, membership, financial support, expenditures, general character, activities, and purposes of the National Security League, a corporation of New York, and of any associated organizations.

Then if the Senator will further permit——

Mr. HOLT. Yes; I shall be glad to.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I should like to insert here a list of their national officers, to be found on pages 4 and 5 of the hearings, 1918:

The list of contributors to the National Security League makes interesting reading also and may be found on pages 2051–2067 of the hearings and pages 4 and 5 of the committee report.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As can be seen by the volume I hold in my hand, the investigation assumed formidable proportions. There was quite an extensive hearing with respect to the National Security League in 1918 and 1919. When the investigation was concluded it was found that the league was grading Members of Congress according to their patriotism. Some were 90-percent patriots, some were 75-percent patriots, and some were only 15-percent patriots, and so forth.

Mr. HOLT. Their patriotism I assume depended on how many dollars had come from them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think that perhaps weighed heavily in the scale. At the end of the investigation—if the able Senator will indulge me a moment——

Mr. HOLT. Proceed.

Mr. LUNDEEN. On page 16 of the second volume we find these words:

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE AND UNLIMITED WEALTH

The National Security League and like organizations in their political activities constitute a serious menace to representative government. Ordinarily their real purpose is concealed, and their appeal is made to the public on some principle in harmony with dominant sentiment. Usually, as in this instance, they have access to almost unlimited wealth—

Confirming the statement just made by the Senator from West Virginia—and borrow respectability by the use, in honorary positions, of the names of men of national prominence. If their real purpose were apparent, the danger would be relieved.

Men in public life are given by them to understand that they must be subservient to the demands of such institutions; and, upon their failure to do so, they will be held up to public scorn and humiliation by false accusations. Under such circumstances the best-intentioned candidate for office realizes that he has one of two alternatives—he must be either subservient to the demands of these camouflaged organizations or be put on the defensive by false charges. Such activities on the part of organizations similar to the National Security League have a tendency to compel obedience to the wishes of special interests rather than obedience to a real concern for the welfare of the people. This condition is not at all fanciful, since its baneful effects have been fully demonstrated by the activities of the National Security League.

I am reading from a report made by distinguished Members of Congress—Ben Johnson; Pat Harrison, now a distinguished Senator, then a Member of the House; E. W. Saunders; T. H. Caraway, later a distinguished Senator; C. F. Reavis; and E. E. Browne.

Let me continue:

The fight made by the National Security League upon the loyalty of men of the highest patriotism was so glaringly unjust and so patently false that it failed of its purpose.

Mr. President, I am using the words of a committee of Members of Congress. These are not my words.

Mr. HOLT. Reference is made to the committee in which Colonel Stimson was very active, as I have previously stated.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; as I understand it, Colonel Stimson was a member of the league and one of its prominent speakers. Let me read further:

But the failure was due to an error of judgment on the part of the league, and not because of the lack of vicious purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error. Colonel Stimson was not a member of the committee. The Senator from Minnesota is now reading what purports to be a report by a congressional committee of the House. Colonel Stimson was not a member of that committee.

Mr. HOLT. Colonel Stimson was not a member of the congressional committee, but he was active in the National Security League, to which reference is made by the congressional committee.

Mr. KING. I know, but the Senator from Minnesota is reading what purports to be a report by a congressional committee of the House.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is true.

Mr. KING. The Senator from West Virginia interpolated the words "in which Colonel Stimson was very active." That would imply that Colonel Stimson was a member of the congressional committee.

Mr. HOLT. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. KING. Obviously the Senator did not mean it, but that was the implication.

Mr. HOLT. I mean the league which the committee is discussing as being a group of—why did not the committee simply say "scoundrels"?

Let the Senator from Minnesota proceed with the reading.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As I understand, the Senator maintains that Henry L. Stimson was a member of the National Security League.

Mr. HOLT. And one of its outstanding speakers.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And one of its outstanding speakers. It is true, as the Senator from Utah says, that Colonel Stimson was not a member of the congressional committee.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Let me continue the reading:

In times of war, organizations avowing patriotism, such as the National Security League did, will receive many adherents and for that reason the league secured a membership of nearly 90,000 people throughout the United States. It was the duty of the league, therefore, to exercise the greatest care and caution in its publicity matter, where the good names of men were involved.

Section 1 of the Federal act, generally known as the Corrupt Practices Act, approved June 25, 1910, is as follows:

"The term 'political committee,' under the provisions of the act, shall include national committees of all political parties, the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result, or attempt to influence the result, of an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected."

Sections 5 and 6 of the act, as amended by an act approved August 19, 1911, require that such political committees as are defined in section 1 shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., certain itemized statements which shall be verified by oath.

And now, Mr. President, follows the final statement of that congressional committee:

In the judgment of your committee the National Security League has violated the provisions of that act, the penalty for which is a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment not longer than 1 year, or both.

THE INFAMOUS NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE

That was the judgment of the congressional committee upon the infamous National Security League. So far as I know, no prosecutions were begun. Perhaps the members of the league were too powerful to be prosecuted. However, the judgment of the committee was that they should be prosecuted and punished for violation of the laws of the United States.

I have some personal knowledge of this matter, because a certain plutocrat, Mr. Emerson McMillan, of 40 Wall Street, contributed more than $5,000 to send speakers into my congressional district in order to defeat me in 1918. The infamous and vicious National Security League—an organization unworthy of America, unworthy of our institutions, unworthy of our Constitution and our liberties—invaded our congressional districts with un-American, pro-European propaganda to defeat American-minded Americans who believed in the Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson foreign policy. Some of the men associated with it may be innocent. If so, they had better clear themselves of those who were really guilty, and who may have dragged them into the situation.

Mr. HOLT. Has the Senator ever heard of Colonel Stimson making any statement in condemnation of the League?

COL. HENRY L. STIMSON AN INTERVENTIONIST

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am not familiar with any such statement. Colonel Stimson seems to want to involve us in Europe, and he has earned the title of interventionist. That is enough for me. I cannot vote for intervention in the quarrels, real-estate titles, and boundaries disputes in Europe. Why leave our own to stand on foreign ground and battle for the fortunes of kings, emperors, and empires over there? We face unsolved problems in America which demand all our attention here. We may soon be menaced by real danger from within, unless we solve our own domestic problems in the near future.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

The Senator from Minnesota spoke about Colonel Stimson having the title of "Interventionist." That is not his most famous title. Colonel Stimson is known as Col. Henry L. "Wrong Horse" Stimson. The title originated in the fact that he recognized the wrong revolutionary government in Central America. It was given to him while Col. Stimson was Secretary of State. So the title "Interventionist" is only his 1939–40 title. His real title is Col. Henry L. "Wrong Horse" Stimson.

I thank the Senator from Minnesota for bringing up the matter to which he has referred, because I was not familiar with it.

Coming back to the question of Nicaragua, as I have stated, Colonel Stimson was active in having the United States Marines in Nicaragua. What for? To protect $15,000,000 of investment of American money. It meant the lives of many American boys who were killed down there to protect an investment of $15,000,000.

What did the late J. Hamilton Lewis, a distinguished Senator from Illinois, have to say about the activity in Nicaragua? No one could equal the eloquence of the words of Senator Lewis, so I shall read them. This is what he said about a condition for which Colonel Stimson created the background. This is Senator Lewis of Illinois speaking:

I beg to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that there can be no justification tendered from any source within the spirit of our Constitution nor the principles of our Government, within the theory for which this America is established, to excuse, far less to justify, the theory upon which this Government has launched these American soldiers and sent down to distant foreign lands its young men—the heroic members of its marines, as pledges with their lives as additional security to private bankers, whose money, being lent upon an adventure in that country for excessive interest, under conditions of most exaggerated premiums—and this, our Nation, to lend the lives of its sons as this human pledge for the securing of this money. Thus we risk them where in the conflict they must die and be brought back in coffins to the bemoaning house of misery and agony of their homes. And as to the reason why they were in Nicaragua, and where they were set upon, it must be answered that it was by those who felt they were justified in repelling an aggression from strangers, our people, sir, up to the present time all we get from our Government as explanation—with the expiration of nearly 24 hours—is the fact that these men were engaged in repelling what they claim was an invasion or assault by those of Nicaragua who are charged in Nicaragua with being "irregulars."

Charged by whom? By those who advocated the policies of Colonel Stimson.

Let me continue, in the words of Senator Lewis:

In other words, let us be to the point—we, of the United States, have assumed to establish a political administration in a distant foreign country, in Central America, particularly in Nicaragua, in order that one political administration shall be maintained there as against its rivals, because our favorite, chosen as such, is under some pledge that it will guarantee the payment of the debts which have been incurred in Nicaragua in behalf of American private banking interests of the United States. We pledge the lives of our young men and of our soldiers as collection agencies in behalf of these private interests until these American young men are murdered, and their mangled bodies brought back to their loved ones, to whom the only reply America can make, when her American citizens are thus disposed of in such ruthless, cruel, and inhuman manner, is that they have lent their children to sustain an administration of a distant country in power, because the officials of that political power have promised to secure the return of money of private interests which has been lent within that land.

If these private bankers desire to lend their money to these countries, that is for them. Then let them take such steps to protect their securities as our American bankers are only permitted if they lend anywhere in the United States or Europe—to the courts of the country, or whatever source of help they may seek by private means. But let us end this using the children of America as extra pledges to the security of the private bankers, the forfeit of the pledge being the lives of these sons of our land. Mr. President, thereafter we may move once again toward reviving the friendship of South and Central America and thus justify the policy of the Monroe Doctrine and reestablish that friendship which we sought to extend them in the hope that reciprocity might avail, which in trade or in kindliness would greatly profit us.

Those were the words of Senator Lewis about sending marines to Nicaragua, an activity which was continued from 1929 to 1933 as a result of the policy of Colonel Stimson, who went down there in 1927 as Ambassador Extraordinary, representing the executive branch of our Government, and of others preceding him.

SENATOR GLASS COMMENTS ON STIMSON

Now let me read something else said about Colonel Stimson. I want not the words of RUSH D. HOLT alone used, but I want the words of men who served in the Senate while Colonel Stimson was in charge of these matters. I have already read the words of the late Senator Lewis, of Illinois. Now let me read the words of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is still a distinguished Member of the United States Senate. Here are the words of Senator GLASS about Secretary Stimson, the man whose nomination to the Cabinet of the President as Secretary of War we are now considering:

Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senators who have just spoken have not learned that our Secretary of State is a law unto himself.

The Secretary of State was Colonel Stimson.

It will be recalled that a few years ago the Senate, without a dissenting voice, passed a resolution expressing the conviction that the Secretary of State should discontinue his utterly lawless exercise of a function not appertaining in any sense or degree to that Department, the matter of approving or disapproving foreign loans.

I desire to emphasize what the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said about Colonel Stimson when he referred to Secretary Stimson's "utterly lawless exercise of a function." If confirmed to the office to which he has been nominated, would he do that again?

I continue the words of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] about Colonel Stimson:

He snapped his fingers in the face of the Senate, and the very next day promulgated additional so-called rules and regulations under which the State Department would continue exercising that lawless function, with the result that, with the approval of the State Department, the portfolios of banks from one end of this country to the other were filled with worthless foreign securities, which today are a tremendous contribution to the existing depression and the curtailment of credit under which we are suffering.

I think that is worth repeating. This is what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] charged Colonel Stimson with doing while he was Secretary of State:

He snapped his fingers in the face of the Senate, and the very next day promulgated additional so-called rules and regulations under which the State Department would continue exercising that lawless function, with the result that, with the approval of the State Department, the portfolios of banks from one end of this country to the other were filled with worthless foreign securities.

Colonel Stimson, according to the Senator from Virginia, approved the selling in this country of worthless foreign securities which has been the cause of great loss to American investors.

Continuing the words of the Senator from Virginia:

I venture to predict right now that we may adopt by a unanimous vote of the Senate the proposal presented by the Senator from Arkansas, and somewhere in some appropriation act the Secretary of State will find a sum that will be available to him to use the marines already in Nicaragua for the purpose of controlling the election there. The Senate need not be surprised if that should occur.

The Senator from Virginia has said that while Colonel Stimson was a member of the Cabinet he took the law into his own hands and exercised a lawless function.

How do we know, if his nomination to be Secretary of War in the Cabinet were confirmed, that he would not again snap his fingers at the Senate and refuse to pay any attention to the law of the country? His record, according to the Senator from Virginia, is that he cares nothing for the law when it stands in his way. I do not make the statement, but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] did make that statement that Colonel Stimson actually snapped his fingers in the face of the Senate and actually violated the law by a lawless exercise of the functions of Government.

APPROVED FOREIGN LOANS HERE

What is meant by approving the sale of foreign bonds? I think every community in America knows; thousands of American investors know. The New York Times, on the 7th day of June 1930, speaking about Stimson and foreign loans, said:

STIMSON APPROVES LOAN HERE

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 6.—Formal approval has been given by the State Department to the application of a syndicate of bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., to float in the United States about one-third of the $300,000,000 German reparations loan of 1930. The Department stated today that it would make no objection to the flotation of the American share of the loan, which on its face value is $100,000,000, although the actual dollar value is only about $83,000,000.

The Department of State approved the selling of $100,000,000 of German bonds. Who was in charge of the Department of State at that time? Col. Henry L. Stimson. Who was in charge of the syndicate that sold these bonds to the American people? J. P. Morgan & Co. Who, again, may I ask, was the Secretary of State that had charge of that matter? Henry L. Stimson, the man whom the President now wishes to have in his Cabinet.

Let me quote the words of the President himself in 1932 about the sale of these bonds in America. I quote his words because they show that the President is appointing to his Cabinet a man who, he knows, was in charge of the approval of the flotation of such foreign loans in this country. I quote the words of President Roosevelt at that time:

Many of the banks and most of their agents were complete novices in world finance and even in knowledge of foreign countries. Some legitimate loans were made, others to tottering governments as well as to every sort of unsound foreign enterprise. Whether or not some of these bankers knew all the facts, the public did not. A novice public sent billions of dollars into foreign countries. The banking houses were, and are, satisfied with the silence of the national administration for they got their commissions.

Who was silent? The State Department. Who was in charge of the State Department? Col. Henry L. Stimson. The present President of the United States indicted Colonel Stimson for remaining silent while foreign loans were being floated in America, and American investors were gouged to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

I continue the quotation from President Roosevelt:

The foreign investment business became so general that even the best financial minds lost perspective; even supposedly reputable investment bankers cooperated with foreign interests to make suckers of American investors.

"Make suckers of American investors" when the American Department of State under Colonel Stimson approved the flotation of foreign loans in this country.

I desire to read further from President Roosevelt:

Unfortunately our national administration did not lift a finger to point out the dangers of any of these particularly vicious courses of financial exploitation.

Who "did not lift a finger" in the national administration? Who was in charge of the Department of State? Secretary Stimson. Did not President Roosevelt know it? He must have known it, yet in 1932 he said that they "did not lift a finger to point out the danger."

He says further about the administration of the Department of State at that time:

It knew the losses to come from unsound promotions and watered stock. It knew that many of the foreign loans were utterly unsound. It knew what the consequences might be from those investment trusts which were fictitious, speculative devices.

What was meant by "it"? Who was "it"? The national administration. Who was in charge of the foreign-loan department? The Department of State. Who was Secretary of State? Colonel Henry Stimson; and President Roosevelt said that it knew these things were being done but did not lift a single finger against them. That is the man whom we are proposing to confirm to the position of Secretary of War in the Cabinet of the President, who had said those things just noted. Was he wrong in condemning the sale of these worthless bonds? No; but is he wrong in naming to the Cabinet the man who was in charge of the Department of State that approved these foreign loans? I say yes.

Today would he raise his finger in objection if such a thing were involved? I feel that he would not.

ROOSEVELT COMMENT ON STIMSON

I have quoted what many Senators have said about Colonel Stimson; and I should like to have the attention of the Senate particularly on this point. I want the Senate to listen to what President Roosevelt himself said. This is not RUSH HOLT speaking about Colonel Stimson. This is Franklin D. Roosevelt speaking of Colonel Stimson, the man he is now naming Secretary of War; so the President cannot say that he did not know anything about him. This is what President Roosevelt said in 1930 in New York. This is the headline in the New York Times:

Roosevelt scores attack by Stimson as hyprocrisy.

Did you know that the President of the United States was appointing a hyprocrite as Secretary of War? I do not say that President Roosevelt in 1930 called Henry L. Stimson a hyprocrite. I do not know the need of a hypocrite in the Cabinet today, although the Cabinet has the most unusual collection of human beings that was ever established under one tent. [Laughter.]

Frankly, you may go to the Zoo and you cannot find as many species of different traits as you can find down there in Morgenthau, Hopkins, Ickes, others, and now Stimson. When Colonel Knox comes up for confirmation I intend to discuss what Colonel Knox thinks of the Cabinet. But may I repeat what President Roosevelt said:

Roosevelt scores attack by Stimson as hypocrisy.

The President knows Stimson is a hypocrite. He charged him in Brooklyn with being a hypocrite. Now he names him to the Cabinet. Of course, that is his appointment. It is not RUSH HOLT'S. He was not satisfied with accusing Stimson of hypocrisy in 1930; but after specifically referring to Henry L. Stimson as a hypocrite once, this is what he said the following night. I want the Senate to get this. Here is President Roosevelt, then Governor Roosevelt, speaking of Colonel Stimson and some of the other Cabinet members who were campaigning against Mr. Roosevelt's nomination as governor. He specifically refers to Colonel Stimson, and this is what he said; this is not RUSH HOLT, this is President Roosevelt speaking of his newly beloved Cabinet member:

They have shocked the conscience of the fair-minded and thoughtful people of this State.

May I repeat that? This is the man who is being named as Secretary of War by President Roosevelt, and this is what President Roosevelt says about him:

They have shocked the conscience of the fair-minded and thoughtful people of this State.

But Colonel Stimson has gone to the mourners' bench, and is now pure.

I am not through with what the President thinks of Colonel Stimson. This is not RUSH HOLT speaking. This is what the President said. You know, Colonel Stimson went up to New York to speak. That was when the President asked Cabinet members to show their credentials when they came into the State.

Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] knows about that speech, when the President asked Cabinet members to show their credentials, and asked what right they had to come into the State to defeat candidates; but I shall not discuss that subject here today. After calling Stimson a hypocrite, and after saying that he had shocked the conscience of the fair-minded and thoughtful people of the State—he did not want Henry Stimson up around New York; he wanted him back in Washington—this is what he said to Colonel Stimson:

Stay at your post in Washington, and bend your efforts and spend your time solving the problems which the whole Nation is facing under your administration.

Will Colonel Stimson stay in Washington now? He would not stay here when the President was after him the last time he was a member of the Cabinet.

Let me repeat that. This is Franklin D. Roosevelt speaking of Henry L. Stimson. He said to him then:

Stay at your post in Washington—

I am quoting him—and bend your efforts and spend your time solving the problems which the whole Nation is facing under your administration.

He must not have done so, to cause the President to make that statement. But, leaving that point, I want to discuss another subject.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. When the Senator referred to these various statements, I was wondering if perhaps we cannot afford to disregard all these statements in view of the overshadowing issue of intervention. On that issue—the issue of intervention—perhaps the two great minds merge.

Mr. HOLT. Well, I do not know. After what Colonel Knox said about the President, and then the President naming him to the Cabinet, there must be some issue on which their minds merge. I do not know what it is. I cannot answer that; but 2 weeks ago I told the Senate what Colonel Knox thought of the President, and then the President appointed him to that office. As I said then, certainly the President would not appoint to his Cabinet a man who would not tell the truth. If Colonel Knox said this about the President, it must be the truth; and, of course, he must have swallowed awfully hard at that time. [Laughter.]

I am going back now to 1934. I am trying to bring these things up to date as fast as I can, because, as I say, I do not want to hold the Senate unduly. I want to discuss Colonel Knox a little later on; but, speaking in 1934, we find this in the New York Times of November 27, 1934:

Stimson * * * agrees Anglo-American ties are stronger than treaties.

Then he goes ahead to say that we should have "mutual cooperation between England and the United States of America." In that phrase is the reason why Colonel Stimson has been named as Secretary of War. The President wants cooperation between England and the United States of America. That is what Colonel Stimson advocated in 1934, and has advocated for 25 years in this country. Cooperation in war as in peace is desired by some. Some men in this country are not quite sure that we are not still an English colony. Colonel Stimson goes to England to be dined and wined almost every year, and accepts distinguishing remarks from the Scottish Guards and other official groups, as the records will show; but I shall not discuss his English feeling, except to say that you can hardly pick up a book written on English-American relations, about parallel policy, about cooperation between England and the United States, that does not note that Stimson is one of the paramount Anglo spokesmen in the American continent. His whole record has been one of interest in the continuation of the influence of England. As late as the 12th day of June of this year the London Times, speaking editorially, named only two Republicans in its editorial praise of the President; and who were the two Republicans that the London Times named? Colonel Knox and Henry L. Stimson.

A week before the President of the United States appointed these two men to the Cabinet, the only two Republicans named by the London Times as being close friends of the English viewpoint were Colonel Knox and Henry L. Stimson. A week later they were appointed to the Cabinet. I referred to the matter on the floor of the Senate, and aroused the indignation of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]; and after watching the Chicago machine in action I must have said something pretty bad if it aroused his indignation, because he has shown no indignation toward the Chicago machine. I shall not discuss that subject at this time, however; I shall discuss it a little later; but he became very indignant because I said that England was satisfied with the appointment of Colonel Knox and Henry L. Stimson.

ENGLAND'S COMMENT ON STIMSON

I quote from the New York Herald Tribune of June 21. Certainly the Herald Tribune is not a pro-German newspaper. I have never heard it called such: but this is what it said.

This is from the Herald Tribune Bureau in London:

The appointment—

Now, get this: Colonel Stimson said he was not an interventionist. London thinks so. May I quote it?

LONDON, June 20.—The appointment of Henry L. Stimson and Col. Frank Knox in place of Harry H. Woodring and Charles Edison was welcomed here tonight as a sign that the United States policy was "crystallizing" in the direction of intervention.

I want to repeat that. It is said that Colonel Stimson is no interventionist. Here is the view from London on June 20 of this year:

The appointment of Henry L. Stimson and Col. Frank Knox in place of Harry H. Woodring and Charles Edison was welcomed here tonight as a sign that the United States policy was "crystallizing" in the direction of intervention.

" 'Crystallizing' in the direction of intervention!" Of course it was crystallizing, when the President of the United States goes out of the great Democratic Party into the great Republican Party and picks two men who, the London newspapers themselves say, are interventionists, and believe in intervention.

Let me continue this quotation. This is what the dispatch said. The British are not going to say anything about it. Why? Get this:

Further comment could not be obtained in responsible British circles, chiefly because they were reluctant to speak on American policy.

There is shrinking here from any pronouncement which might be considered as "propaganda," and almost all estimates of American policies nowadays might come under that head.

In other words, they said, "Boys, we like that appointment, but we cannot say anything about it publicly." That is what it meant. Get that. They are shrinking from any pronouncement which might be considered as propaganda, because they want America to think that England is leaving them alone. Lord Lothian said, "Nobody over here is spreading any English propaganda." The only two men who believed that there was no propaganda over here were the Senator from South Carolina and Lord Lothian.

This is what the article says. I am still quoting from London:

Mr. Stimson is regarded as the apostle of a strong foreign policy. He is the most experienced statesman in the Republican Party.

I have heard a lot about the Republicans, but I have never heard them insulted like that. This is what it says about going ahead:

Overriding everything else in importance, however, in the opinion of Americans here, is the fact that these two appointees are Republicans; that is to say, there are signs that a coalition administration is not out of the question and that foreign policy has become an agreed matter in the United States.

The Daily Mail says that President Roosevelt's employment of Colonel Stimson is "a warning that the United States really does mean business." What do they mean when they say that the United States really does mean business? Senators know what it means; we all know what it means. It means the business of sending American boys to Europe, regardless of the hypocrisy of those who are now saying we are not going to do so. They said the same thing before. They will do it again.

Do not fool yourselves. Unless this intervention foreign policy of America is stopped, we are going into this war, and Members of the Senate who are now saying that they will not vote for war will find an incident by which they can excuse their voting for war.

This is what the News Chronicle says in a headline:

Roosevelt moves for a more pro-Ally Ministry.

These are not American signs; these are English.

I read now from the Daily Herald:

Roosevelt puts pro-Ally champions into Cabinet.

Here is another one from the Daily Express. This is important:

United States will have war Cabinet; key jobs are given to friends of the Allies.

England seems to know what these appointments mean, even if some Members of the Senate do not.

This is what the Daily Express says:

United States will have war Cabinet. Key jobs are given to friends of the Allies.

Here is another one:

Hitler haters join United States Cabinet.

Those are not from United States papers; those are from the controlled English press. They know that it is a United States war Cabinet. But some men in the Senate in smug complacency excuse their own consciences by saying that these men are not interventionists. England admits they are. England admits its is a pro-war Cabinet, and calls it a coalition Cabinet.

It will be remembered that a few weeks ago Colonel Breckenridge, speaking over the air, in a debate, advocated war. Yes, he wanted to send the boys over, then and there. That will be recalled. Col. Henry Breckenridge wanted war. He seems to be satisfied with these nominations. This is what he said:

The nominations are magnificent.

This is a man who advocates a declaration of war, and a man who knows these men personally and knows them as individuals, and as officials and who speaks of their appointments as "magnificent." Of course, they are magnificent to Colonel Breckenridge and all those who want America to declare war, because they know that the record of Colonel Stimson for 25 years has been one of bellicosity, and one of intervention in activities outside of our borders. Of course, the appointments are magnificent to those men.

This is what he said further:

The issues today are above party, and these two men are proving the truth of it.

This article proceeds to say that it not only brought the applause of Colonel Breckenridge, but it brought the support of the lawyers representing J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., who are active for intervention, as the records show, and of many other interventionists. Every interventionist in the United States is for the confirmation of Knox and Stimson.

I should like to have any Member of the Senate name one interventionist who is not for the confirmation of Stimson and Knox to the Cabinet. [Pause.] I wait to see if there is anyone who knows an interventionist who is not for their confirmation. [Pause.] I do not know of any, and it seems that the Senate does not know of any. Yet it is said, "Oh, they do not mean intervention; not at all." Yet they have received the applause of the papers that want us in war; they have received the applause of the men who want us in war; they have received the applause of the foreign press which wants us in war; and they have received the support of the President of the United States, who is not and has not been neutral. They have had his support because the President wants a greater intervention policy in the United States.

The papers have said, as I stated a moment ago, that Governor Woodring would not go along in stripping our defenses in order that the Allies should be helped, and he was removed from office because of that, and today we find that the situation is that in his place is a man who is interested in doing anything necessary for England's victory even to the acts of war on our part.

I wish now to bring to the attention of the Senate what Colonel Stimson advocated on the 18th day of June this year. Part of it has already been stated, but I see no danger in repetition. This is what Colonel Stimson advocated 2 days before he was appointed Secretary of War:

First, we should repeal the provisions of our ill-starred so-called neutrality venture which has acted as a shackle to our true interests for over 5 years.

That is No. 1. He wants us to repeal the Neutrality Act. That means to allow American ships to go into the war zone and be sunk. That means allowing Americans in the war zones. Why? Others can answer as well as I can.

Second, we should throw open all of our ports to the British and French naval and merchant marine for all repairs and refueling and other services.

Anyone who knows anything about international law or has any common sense knows that opening the ports of a nation for the repair of vessels is a direct violation of international law and is considered an act of hostility. That is the second thing Colonel Stimson wants done.

Third, we should accelerate by every means in our power the sending of planes and other munitions to Britain and France on a scale which would be effective, sending them, if necessary, in our own ships and under convoy.

Everyone knows that is an act of war. He wants us to send munitions, which are contraband of war, in American ships, to the war zone in Europe. Then can it be said that he is not interested in intervention? Anyone who believes that Colonel Stimson is not interested in intervention must have something wrong with his mind, must have been affected with a New Deal disease which blinds many people after they are exposed to it.

He wants us to send American vessels to belligerent nations anywhere loaded with munitions of war. Can it be said that a man like that should be placed in the Cabinet when America wants to stay out of war? Then he wants to go to South America again. This is what he said:

Fourth, we should refrain from being fooled by the evident bluff of Hitler's so-called "fifth column" movements in South America.

Senators will remember his interest in Nicaragua. He wanted to go down there, and did go down there, and American marines paid with their lives because we wanted to go into South America and Central America.

Fifth, in order to assist the home front of Britain's defense we should open our lands as a refuge for the children and old people of Britain whose liability to suffering from air raids in Great Britain is a constant inducement to surrender to terms which she would otherwise resist.

I do not want these older people and children brought over here for that reason. I want them brought over here, if they are to be brought over, for their protection; because they did not make the war. Yet they will be the ones who will suffer as a result of it. He only wants these older people and children sent to America so that the morale of England will be upheld when some bomb drops and kills unfortunate children of the men fighting. There is an angle which has not been discussed. It is not that he is interested from the humanitarian standpoint in bringing these children out of England, where they will be killed, but he wants them brought out in order that it may bolster the morale of England. If we are to bring them out, I want to bring them out because I do not believe those children and elders should be killed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will recall that Colonel Stimson's New Haven speech was made before France had sued for peace. The Senator will also notice that in Colonel Stimson's New Haven speech he specifically mentioned that only children from Great Britain were to be evacuated. Does the Senator know of any reason why Colonel Stimson should have specified that only British children should be evacuated, and not French children, Belgian children, Dutch children, and other children who are sufferers from this terrible war?

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator from Missouri. I cannot see any difference. A child is a child to me, whether he is born in Germany, whether he is born in France, or whether he is born in Great Britain. I am not one who feels that it satisfies my conscience simply because I do not like the government of a certain country, to let children of that country stay in the country to be killed. I do not want to draw such a line as Colonel Stimson wants to draw between the children of Great Britain and those of other nations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At the time Colonel Stimson made the New Haven speech France was still a combatant. Colonel Stimson proposed to evacuate English children and leave the French children to their fate.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator. Of course, that would be the effect.

I have tried to show that Colonel Stimson has been an Anglomaniac for 25 years. He has been wined and dined by the British nobility for the last 20 years. If Senators do not believe so let them go to the papers and they will notice that whenever Colonel Stimson went to England those who want a more parallel policy with the United States were the ones who wined and dined him.

What I say is no indictment of his sincerity. What I have shown is that he is prejudiced, not that he is insincere.

His prejudice has been based on his interest in a particular country, and as he said, "It is more important than even treaties themselves."

I may add this about the children. Yes, the poor children of France were not only in danger of bombs being dropped on them, but they were in danger from tanks, in danger of actual infantry fire, and Colonel Stimson did not advocate bringing those little children of France over to America. But he wants to bring over the children of England. I repeat what he wrote, because I think it is significant of why Colonel Stimson wants to bring the children over from England. Here is his exact language:

In order to assist the home front of Britain's defense we should open our lands as a refuge for the children and old people of Britain whose liability to suffering from air raids in Great Britain is a constant inducement to surrender to terms which she would otherwise resist.

Just think of that. He does not propose to bring them over in order to save their lives, but bring them over because then they will not be in the way, so they will not stand in the way of maintaining a strong morale.

Then for Senators to stand on this floor, as they will, and say that Colonel Stimson is not for intervention is to fly in the face of his record for a quarter of a century. He had shown that bellicose attitude, as I have proved, preceding the World War. He showed it as Secretary of State, and he has shown it in this war. He was one of the most active for intervention.

Senators may say, "Of course, Colonel Stimson does not believe that we should go into war"; but this is what he said in speaking before the Foreign Relations Committee in 1939.

Senator JOHNSON of California. Now I am asking you the question, then, Would you consider that we should take part and join with Great Britain, France, and Russia in protecting them?

That is a direct question from the Senator from California, and here is what Colonel Stimson said:

Mr. STIMSON. Not unless the situation became dangerous enough so as to indicate that we would be the next victim. Then I would take part mighty quick. I would take part before they were beaten.
Senator JOHNSON of California. Take part with anybody?
Mr. STIMSON. I would get as many friends on the side that I was on as I could possibly, provided they could shoot straight.

He would take part before they were beaten. That is what he said in 1939. And certainly today there is only one last country between complete Hitler victory in Europe and what Colonel Stimson speaks of, and that is England. When is he going to take part? On his own word before the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate he is going to take part before they are beaten. In other words, he is going to take part as soon as he feels it is possible for us to get into it.

And what does that mean? That means now. Do not fool yourselves, Senators. Do not try to fool yourselves in respect to this matter. Do not try to cover up your consciences on this matter. Colonel Stimson said he would take part before they are beaten, and there is no other time before they are beaten except right now. That is the reason for his appointment to the Cabinet.

FAVORS USE OF NAVY FOR ENGLAND

I quote from one of Colonel Stimson's letters which appears in the record of the hearings of 1939, as follows:

We cannot ignore the fact that at almost any moment an armed attack may be aimed by the Fascist group of powers against the vital safety of any one of the two peace-loving nations upon which today rests in large part the safety of our own civilization—Great Britain and France.

Such an attack would almost inevitably involve both of those nations and from present appearances would be cooperated in by all three of the Fascist powers. In that event only one course could be depended on ultimately to save the present hard-earned civilization upon which our own national welfare rests.

Today the aggressive group is more powerful in the air and on the land than even France and Britain combined, and it is probably sufficiently strong at sea to pin down the British and French fleets to European waters, leaving exposed to the powerful Japanese fleet the whole western Pacific Ocean, including the eastern speaking dominions of Australia, New Zealand, and even western Canada, as well as the naval base at Singapore, which is the key to the protection of those regions.

What would he do? Let me quote what Colonel Stimson would do. He further said in his letter:

The defense against such joint action in Europe and Asia by the Fascist powers can only be securely accomplished by the common action of the naval power of the three large democracies, including the United States.

I want to make that clear, and I want to emphasize it. Colonel Stimson is going to fight Germany and the dictators. Here is what he said in his own words, not what he told somebody else, but in his own words:

The defense against such joint action in Europe and Asia by the Fascist powers can only be securely accomplished by the common action of the naval power of the three large democracies, including the United States.

So Senators can see that Colonel Stimson even a year ago advocated using our United States Navy to defeat Germany. And then to say that he is not an interventionist, to say that he is not for intervention, is idle. How in the world can we not be involved if we are going to use the United States Navy to whip Germany? We do not need a declaration of war if we try that. We will then be in it immediately. That is what the colonel said. He made clear that he felt that we should absolutely use our fleet, and let the European democracies have our bases. Then how can one say that he is not interested in intervention? Of course, one could continue at great length about Colonel Stimson's record preceding the World War, his record in South and Central America, his record as Secretary of State, his prejudicial leaning to one belligerent in this war, and his statements as the result of this war, besides his activities—they all point to one thing, and one thing alone, and that is intervention in this war. They point to it as clearly as anything could be pointed to.

Of course, the whole situation can be determined only by one thing, and that is by the viewpoint of the individual himself. The record shows that his attitude is one of intervention. The records shows that he was appointed—and time will prove this—as the result of his intervention policy. The President of the United States wanted a Secretary of War who would go along in anything that he wanted to do in the way of involvement in this war, and he could not obtain that promise, he could not obtain that assurance from Governor Woodring, who was then a member of his Cabinet, and had been for years, and so Governor Woodring was put out and in his place was placed an outstanding spokesman of intervention in this country, Colonel Stimson himself.

The whole record is here. America is establishing a war Cabinet. It is establishing a war Cabinet, and yet some individuals are trying to preach peace. They are preaching peace, perhaps, but their action is toward war. Today the Secretary of War has been given increased power, and that increased power will be used for involvement and intervention, and there is but one reason, and one alone, why the President of the United States left his party and went out to pick a man of another party; why he fired a member of his Cabinet, the first and only member of the President's Cabinet who has been fired. There is only one reason for such action, and one reason alone, and that is that America is on the way to war. And the only thing that will stop it is the common sense and good judgment of Congress, because the Cabinet is pro-war. As a British newspaper said, "The war Cabinet has been created."

Mr. President, these are not idle fears. This is not idle talk. The record will prove it. The memoirs of the future will prove that America is going interventionist, much to my regret. And when I say America is going interventionist, I say so not because of the statements of elected legislators, but of these appointees who advocate a policy of involvement, while preaching peace.

Therefore I feel that confirmation of the nomination of Colonel Stimson would be an attack against the peace and welfare of America, and I shall not vote for it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

GOVERNOR OF THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to report from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals the nomination of Col. Glen E. Edgerton, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for appointment as Governor of the Panama Canal. I also ask for the immediate consideration of the nomination.

I should like to explain to the Senate that Gen. Clarence S. Ridley, who for the past several years has served with such distinction and efficiency as Governor of the Panama Canal, has been transferred to other duty; and Colonel Edgerton, who has been engineer of maintenance and Vice Governor of the Canal for the same period of time, has been appointed Governor in the stead of General Ridley. Inasmuch as the continuity of this office is of the very utmost importance, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make the report, and I also ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the report being received? The Chair hears none, and the report is received. Is there objection to the consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and the nominee is confirmed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, yesterday I read one of the most impressive editorials I have had the opportunity to examine for some months past. I was greatly impressed by the editorial, because it expresses precisely my attitude in reference to international affairs insofar as our becoming involved in the present conflict in Europe is concerned.

At this time I shall not consume the time of the Senate by reading the entire editorial, but I respectfully commend it to the attention of Senators.

The editorial is entitled "The Third World War." It is from the pen of Mr. Maurer, the chief editorial writer of the New York Daily News, and was reprinted in the columns of the Washington Times-Herald of yesterday.

At this time I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the closing paragraph of that very able editorial, which reads:

There appears to be no hope that the American people learned from their first World War experience that they cannot settle the problems of Europe. We appear to be on the verge of trying it once more.

Unfortunately, I interpolate.

The isolation cause seems to be almost as completely lost as the cause of France in this war. So the best the isolationists can hope for is that after a second World War misadventure the American people will learn and inwardly digest the lesson thereof, and that when the third World War comes along they will have sense enough to stay out of it.

Mr. President, I send the editorial to the desk, and ask that it be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, partially in pursuance of that editorial, I have before me a resolution. The resolution was sent to me by a committee on resolutions at a meeting held in Wake County, at the capital of my State, Raleigh, N. C., the home of my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. At this time I wish to read this resolution in order that some understanding of the interest of the American people may be had by the Members of this body, particularly in reference to my State of North Carolina.

The resolution was sent to me several days ago. On receipt of the resolution I communicated with the signers thereof, and told them that it would be a very great pleasure for me to bring it to the attention of the Members of this body, and that it would be embodied in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask, not that it be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, but that it be printed in the body of the RECORD, under "Resolutions."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to read the resolution.

Whereas the present European war has raised very difficult problems for the American Nation in both its foreign relations and in its domestic problems; and

Whereas under our democratic system of government it is proper and fitting that citizens of the United States make known to their President and to their Representatives in Congress their attitude and desires in this crisis; and

Whereas we, a group of citizens of Wake County and vicinity, N. C., are imbued with the patriotic desire to promote the welfare of our country and of the world at large: Be it

Resolved, That it is our belief and desire that our Government should pursue the following policies in the present emergency:

1. That every effort should be made to prevent our country's becoming a belligerent in the war, and that we ought not to send our men to fight in Europe or in European waters.

Mr. President, I desire to digress for a brief comment, if I may be permitted to say that while the greater number of the people of my State of North Carolina, and I believe of the Nation—though I may be in error as to that—are entirely in favor of the United States providing some form of aid to the Allies, but they are not desirous of pursuing such a course to the extent of precipitating any incident which might involve us in war. I believe that 90 percent of the people of North Carolina, and likewise 90 percent of the people of the Nation, particularly the mothers, are vigorously and violently opposed to sending their sons abroad to participate in the quarrels of Europe which have been proceeding for more than 300 years as the outcome of their warlike desires and of efforts to change and adjust territorial boundaries.

The second resolving clause reads as follows:

2. That it is the sentiment of this meeting that our country should immediately and vigorously prepare for its adequate defense against any enemy or combination of enemies.

I repeat that portion of clause 2 which reads:

prepare for its adequate defense against any enemy or combination of enemies.

I therefore am pleased to assume, from the wording and objective of the resolution, that North Carolinians and the American people generally, for that matter, are not desirous of arming with a view to attempting to bring about the conquest of any other country in the world, nor are they in favor of arming and preparing for the purpose of sending our sons abroad and carrying on in uniform in an effort to settle the quarrels of the Old World.

The third and fourth resolving clauses reads:

3. That we approve our Government's efforts to promote the solidarity of the New World and favor something in the nature of a league of nations for the Western Hemisphere, which might later serve as a model for the remainder of the world.

4. That while meeting the threat from abroad we should not abandon and should continue efforts to improve the lot of the common man in this country.

I digress there to say that I trust in the expenditure of the approximately $14,000,000,000, which we will have appropriated for building up the national defense and in providing armed forces, we will not in anywise, if it possibly can be avoided, interfere with the continued progress of the masses of this country or of the Nation as a whole, and that none of their rights will be interfered with under the program.

The fifth resolving clause reads:

5. That in the present critical situation we should make every effort to visualize clearly and to promote the interests of our own country, for we believe that, in the long run, we can thereby best serve the entire world.

I hope that the world will listen to that friendly and timely advice, because of all times, Mr. President, when we should give attention to our internal affairs and to the enemy within, now is the time.

The sixth resolving clause reads:

6. That in our justifiable efforts to stamp out subversive movements in our country we should take great care to preserve those rights and privileges which are guaranteed in our Bill of Rights and which are the heritage of every American citizen. We should do everything in our power to avoid sacrificing those very liberties we are seeking to protect.

I believe that we all are in high accord with the objectives of paragraph 6 of the resolution.

The seventh resolving clause reads:

7. That these resolutions are passed without reference to the current political campaign for we believe that loyalty and patriotism to our country are above parties and politics.

They should be. Our country should remain first and uppermost in the minds of the American people, particularly at this critical hour, regardless of any political controversy or oncoming campaign.

Finally the eighth resolving clause reads:

8. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to the North Carolina Members of both Houses of Congress.

The number voting in favor of the resolution was 116; those voting "no" were 28.

Mr. President, I desire now to make some observations concerning another subject, namely, the enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States.

While the Immigration and Naturalization Service has been transferred, as we all know, from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice, where, for many reasons, I am glad indeed it has been established, and the indications are that the lax and lenient practices of the former Department—that is to say, the Department of Labor—may be superseded by a more sound and constructive policy in the administration and enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States, it may be well to review some of the evils attending the administration of the law by the Labor Department if we are to avoid the pitfalls which led to the condition which resulted in the transfer of this important function of the Government from one Department to the other by the President, with the approval of the Members of this body and of the other House, constituting the Congress of the United States. I think the President was justified, and is to be applauded for his action, in asking for the transfer of that important division of our Government to the Department of Justice, where, I believe, it will be more properly and more promptly administered in all respects than theretofore it was under the direction of the present Secretary of Labor.

In full realization of the fact that this country was settled by immigrants, including religious and political refugees from other lands, and that every generation of the American people from that of our founding fathers down to the present day has taken pride in the fact that we have been able to offer a haven of refuge for the oppressed people of the Old World, we should not overlook the fact that the era of expansion and development of our country along geographical lines may have drawn to a close and that henceforth the arrival of every new immigrant must be viewed with an increasing regard for the best interests of our country as a whole rather than the individual immigrant's desire to escape from the deplorable conditions abroad or to improve his economic condition by becoming a part of our national life.

In other words, Mr. President, for many years past there have been those who, upon reasonable grounds, have contended that from the evidence before them and from the experience of the past our immigration laws have been administered for the benefit of the applicant for admission to this country, for the benefit of the immigrant, for the benefit of the alien, and that, on the other hand and to the contrary, they have not been administered for the benefit of the country itself, which should have our first consideration, our first care and thought.

The people of the United States, through their chosen representatives in the Senate and the House of Representatives, came to the conclusion 20 years ago that the unrestricted immigration of aliens into this country should be terminated and in addition to a strengthening of the qualitative standards for the admission of aliens, which had previously existed, a quantitative restriction was imposed through the quota system. This system was greatly improved in 1924 through the enactment of the Immigration Act of that year, which not only established the national origins plan for the determination of immigration quotas, but also inaugurated the immigration visa system, under which the administration of the quotas was placed in the hands of American consular officers throughout the world, who were given the power to stop inadmissible immigrants at their foreign source and to stop all immigrants at their foreign source when the quotas become filled.

That, indeed, was a step in the right direction. At that time, Mr. President, if the Government had put its finger upon the question which interests us today—the question even of the admission of aliens into this country under the quotas—and for a given number of years had stopped the immigration of aliens into this country, we should not be bothered as we now are with the 11,000,000 unemployed, the 26,000,000 American citizens employed only part time, perhaps the expenditure involved now in maintaining 2,700,000 persons on the W. P. A. rolls, the upkeep of 300,000 young men in the C. C. C. camps, and perhaps at this hour we should not have before us the problem of providing employment for the 750,000 young boys and girls who are graduating from our high schools and colleges annually in this country, for whom we cannot find employment, and concerning whom it is said that only one out of every three within the next 3 to 5 years will be able to secure employment. That is a situation which I contend is disgraceful; a situation which should be remedied by now bringing about the enactment into law of a bill which I have introduced in the Senate of the United States, which would stop all immigration into this country for the next 10 years, or certainly until such time as every unemployed and employable American citizen is provided with an American job.

At the present time, as you know, Mr. President, we are concerned not only with unemployment but likewise with un-American, subversive interests in this country which are calling for legislation that will weed them out, deport those guilty of such actions, and curb their subversive activities.

It is unnecessary to recite the evils which led to the enactment of the 1924 act. They are recalled to most of us by the recollection of the races of vessels to American ports in an effort to unload their human cargoes before the quotas should be exhausted, or by the sad plight of aliens who had pulled up all stakes and severed all ties with their home countries in order to proceed to the United States, only to be found to be excludable upon arrival and inspection by the immigration authorities at a port of entry.

Mr. President, our immigration officials throughout the country as a whole, and the employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, are doing a great work. I have found that to be the fact at several of the ports which I have visited from time to time. Only last week I spent several days in New York, during which time I provided myself with the opportunity of visiting the Ellis Island Immigration Station. There I heard several boards examine and inquire into the cases of innumerable immigrants from foreign shores who had come here with the intention of remaining permanently. I was impressed with the care which the members of the respective boards gave to every single case. I was very pleasantly impressed with the fine consideration which they gave to the application of every immigrant who has been detained there pending final decision upon his case. To those men I desire to pay the tribute which I have just paid.

Mr. President, it was principally to prevent the hardships resulting in such cases under the old system that the present consular immigration visa system was inaugurated. It is well that that system was inaugurated, for the reasons I have just enumerated, in cases in which unfortunates in other lands seeking the freedom of this country would pull up stakes, sever all ties with the country of their birth, and come here only to find that perhaps they could not pass the physical and mental examination, or comply with the other requirements of our laws.

The immigration visa or immigration certificate system was considered and debated in Congress for nearly 100 years before it was finally enacted into law. It was not the product of snap judgment, nor was it the result of hastily conceived legislative action. It was the result of cool and deliberate thought, tempered with a sympathetic regard for aliens who might seek to transport themselves to this country without the necessary qualifications for admission, as I have just explained. It was the result of many trials and errors in dealing with the problem of immigration. No government ever conceived and produced a measure with greater care for the best interests of its own citizens and more sympathy for and understanding of the problems of immigrants.

Unfortunately, however, to the responsible heads of the Department of Labor the history of our immigration laws was an unlearned lesson. Through a misconstruction and a misapplication of the history and substance of the law, gross evils reared their ugly heads above the confusion and turmoil of that Department during the past 7 years, before the Immigration and Naturalization Service was transferred to the Department of Justice. Finally, in an effort to avert a national scandal, the President of the United States stepped in and stemmed the tide of nullification and nonenforcement of the law, which was running strongly against the preponderant and overwhelming sentiment of our people that something be done about enforcing our immigration laws, because only within the past several years have the American people become conscious of the violation of those laws in this country.

These are strong statements, but they do not exaggerate the facts, as I shall later show by written evidence. To be more specific, a few of the evils to which reference has been made may be mentioned.

Instead of enforcing the deportation laws of the United States without fear or favor, as any competent and efficient administrative officer should have done but those in office did not do, an alien-coddling policy was adopted by the Secretary of Labor, under which warrants of deportation of alien criminals and law violators and undesirables were suspended in several thousand so-called hardship cases involving aliens who for the most part were wholly undesirable, but who had acquired certain family ties in this country after having succeeded in effecting illegal entrance, often by fraud and misrepresentation, and frequently by committing such infamous crimes as forgery and perjury.

In that connection, Mr. President, I desire to state that we had the subject of deportable aliens before this body in the form of what the Department of Labor was pleased to term "hardship cases." At that time, several years ago, I went to the Department of Labor; and there, without difficulty, I took from the files some several hundred cases that had been dubbed "hardship cases," descriptive of alien criminals whom the Secretary of Labor wanted to remain in this country despite the fact that they had violated our laws to the *n*th degree. I looked into those cases with some care, and consumed several days upon the floor of the Senate in bringing individual cases to the attention of the Members of the Senate. I found that in hundreds of cases which I recited upon the floor of the Senate the individuals concerned were perjurers and thieves and highwaymen, and had committed almost every crime specified upon the statute books of this country.

The records of some of those cases I have in my office today.

The failure to deport with firmness and promptness this motley horde of national gate crashers was the key which opened a veritable Pandora's box of other evils. Having been given the benefit of a suspension of deportation proceedings, thereby tasting the fruits of nonenforcement of our laws, the aliens, their families, friends, and attorneys, proceeded to request a slice of the cake of nullification. Thus the preexamination procedure was born.

Under this extralegal procedure an alien who had entered the United States in an illegal manner could be preexamined by the immigration authorities of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in order to ascertain in advance whether he would be admitted lawfully into this country should he condescend to depart for some country in the Western Hemisphere and apply for admission at a port of entry after having procured a suitable immigration visa from an American consular officer in such foreign country. Of course, a feeble effort to justify this procedure was made on the ground that it saved the taxpayers the expense of deporting such an alien from this country.

Mr. President, that is about the slimmest excuse I have ever heard of in my life, because if those several thousand criminal aliens who had entered this country illegally and who had violated viciously our laws had been deported at the expense of the American Government, the American Government certainly would have saved a large portion of the $17,000,000 which the taxpayers of the United States are paying annually to support the criminals who are crowding our penitentiaries and State penal institutions.

It was soon found, however, that no country of the Western Hemisphere wanted to take a chance on such aliens by admitting them in order that they could apply to our consular officers for immigration visas. What if the immigration visas should be refused? That was the question uppermost in the minds of those interested. Such country would be left holding the bag with a very undesirable alien inside of it. Canada particularly, to which most of such aliens found it to be most convenient for them to proceed, would take no such chance.

The Department of Labor was not to be deterred by such a small thing as this, however. They were already in this slimy business up to their knees, and they now plunged in up to their necks. They worked out an agreement—they preferred to call it an understanding, since international agreements are known in some quarters as treaties, and treaties require the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States in order to make them effective—under which they agreed or understood that each such alien Canada would admit for the purpose of applying at an American consular office in that country for an immigration visa would be guaranteed a return to the United States. In other words, these undesirable aliens would go there upon the advice of the Secretary of Labor and seek readmission into this country by way of a visa to be issued by Canada; and if Canada could not, in view of the smell of the criminal alien, admit him, then it was suggested that we would admit him here without embarrassment to Canada and without regard to their having to maintain him as we had maintained him for years. If the alien should be granted an immigration visa, he would be admitted lawfully as an immigrant; but if the immigration visa should be refused by the consular officer, the alien would be accepted back into the United States without an immigration visa and would resume the status he had in this country prior to his departure.

The aliens who went to Canada to obtain immigration visas from American consular officers in that country obviously were immigrants under our law. They had admitted their immigrant status by applying for immigration visas. Their readmission into the United States was therefore illegal unless they presented valid immigration visas, since section 13 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924—section 213a, title 8, United States Code Annotated, entitled "Persons not to be admitted"—specifically states that—

> No immigrant shall be admitted to the United States unless he (1) has an unexpired immigration visa or was born subsequent to the issuance of an immigration visa of the accompanying parent, (2) is of the nationality specified in the visa in the immigration visa, (3) is a nonquota immigrant if specified in the visa in the immigration visa as such, and (4) is otherwise admissible under the immigration laws.

In addition to violating subdivision (1) of section 13 (a), subdivision (4) of that section was also violated in such cases, since the reason for the failure of an immigrant to obtain the immigration visa from the American consular officer would more than likely have been that he was not admissible into the United States under the immigration laws. The Department of Labor had therefore reached the point of admitting, or promising to admit, aliens who not only were without the immigration visas required by law but who were ineligible to receive immigration visas because they were inadmissible to the United States under the various excluding provisions of the immigration laws relating to the undesirable classes.

Thus the cart came to be placed before the horse, and the admirable immigration visa system established by Congress in an effort to stop undesirable immigrants at their foreign source was so perverted that it was being used to stop the undesirable immigrants inside of the United States. Instead of applying for an immigration visa at an American consular office an alien had a better chance of getting into the United States, especially if he was inadmissible in a lawful manner, by entering illegally and availing himself of the questionable preexamination procedure.

It is known that in some cases aliens who had entered the United States unlawfully, or for a lawful temporary period after which they remained unlawfully, applied for the privileges of the preexamination procedure in order to evade not only the quota restrictions of our immigration laws but also the other qualitative restrictions of those laws. The preexamination procedure was an inducement to aliens to enter illegally in the hope of availing themselves of this nullification pie.

This can be better illustrated, however, by passing to the next step in this sordid procedure and considering the further startling evils to which such nonenforcement of the law had led, namely, the seventh proviso evil. Before proceeding with a discussion of the seventh proviso, on which I shall dwell at length finally, I wish again to make my position clear to this body and to the American people. When I employ the word "alien" I speak of the individual who comes from foreign shores to this country, who is not an American citizen, and who has been here year in and year out for many years, enjoying the fruits of this Nation, and the protection of its flag, but who has never been sufficiently interested to make application for American citizenship. In employing the word "alien" I do not have in mind those fine men of high caliber or those excellent women of high standing who have preferred our country to their own. I have the greatest respect for those who come here from foreign shores, both men and women. I admire their ambition to become affiliated with our people and to become citizens of our country. In employing the word "alien" I speak only of those who have come here illegally and who have remained here illegally; those who arrived here legally and have remained illegally; those who came here legally or illegally and have remained here for years without ever attempting to make application for American citizenship, without showing that they are actually sincerely desirous of becoming a part of this great country which comprises more than 130,000,000 people. I realize that some of our finest men, some of our greatest patriots, statesmen, businessmen, and industrialists—men associated with the development of our country—have been of the number who volunteered to accept homes in our land, and to them we have extended our welcome, and to them we have provided our praise.

In this hour of great problems and trials and tribulations of the world I call to mind this subject, because the American people are interested in weeding out the alien criminals, the undesirables, and sending them back to the countries whence they came.

Of course, that provides us with another problem. In view of the fact that the totalitarian governments are anything but friendly to us—one of those totalitarian governments having swallowed Czechoslovakia, old Hungary, part of Poland, all of Holland and Belgium, and that Germany is now joined by Italy, and that the axis powers now control France—I dare say that we would now experience great difficulty in prevailing successfully upon the dictators of those countries to receive back their nationals whom we have found to be undesirables and criminals, as probably they were before they ever reached these shores.

So there is a problem which must be met, perhaps, by the Congress. Why? Because with thousands upon thousands of aliens, noncitizens, criminals, and undesirables roaming the land, we do not have the facilities or the space in our Federal penitentiaries to house them. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization stated before a Senate Committee on Immigration several years ago that statistics in the possession of his department revealed that more than 20,000 alien criminals were roaming the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. President, if, as I hope, under the direction of the able Attorney General of the United States, those who are cooperating with him in the particular division of the Government shall be successful in rounding up these undesirables who are participating in subversive activities, alien criminals, then there must be some place to put them. What shall we do with them? I have, offhand, a suggestion that we provide detention camps for them in the vicinity of certain Federal institutions, where are now located the necessary administrative forces. Perhaps these alien criminals would be so obnoxious and so undesirable to the people of the respective States wherein the Federal institutions referred to are located that possibly detention camps might have to be provided on islands outside continental United States. Certainly no one in this country wants to be associated with alien criminals. Certainly no one in this country wants to continue to pay taxes for the maintenance of criminal nationals of other countries. Certainly we should no longer coddle alien criminals whom we have coddled for years. Certainly we, as a nation, looking to our own preservation and benefit, should no longer put up with these subversive individuals who are attempting to destroy our Government. Certainly we should not permit alien criminals and other aliens who are interested in sabotage and espionage to remain in our midst. They are not entitled to the same consideration to which criminal citizens are entitled. Alien criminals, those who would destroy our Government, are not entitled to imprisonment within the confines of the continental United States, and therefore I suggest that we inaugurate and construct detention camps on islands outside continental United States.

Mr. President, I want to go further in explaining to the Members of this body and to the American people, through the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, my attitude in reference to this matter. Some of the closest friends I have are American citizens of foreign birth who made application for American citizenship and have become American citizens. I am proud and happy to state that I know of no better citizenry anywhere in the broad expanse of our great country than personal friends of mine who have become American citizens and who have become great leaders. In addition to them, I call to mind without difficulty innumerable other persons with whom I have the honor to have an acquaintanceship, who were once aliens but now are among the finest citizens we have. Let it be known that there is no distinction, and no distinction shall in my mind ever be drawn, and no distinction should ever be countenanced, between the American citizens who have become citizens by their desire and request, and those of us who fortunately were born within the shadows of the great hills of our own country.

Mr. President, I know personally innumerable persons who came from foreign shores who are now making application for American citizenship. For one I say that with open arms I shall welcome them to citizenship in our land. But I do not want to permit to remain here alien criminals who have come here illegally, and who have remained here illegally; and this is the time of all times to interest ourselves in their deportation to their respective lands, or to have them placed in detention camps. Now is the time to do that, in view of the interest we have displayed in reference to national unity and national defense.

I may add in passing that foreigners who have made application for American citizenship are more anxious than anyone else that we weed out the alien criminal. Why? The answer is a perfectly natural one. Because when they obtain American citizenship they do not want reflection to be cast upon them by undesirables from their native lands or from any other foreign lands.

I have received hundreds of communications as the result of broadcasts made by me over the radio, from those who have made application for American citizenship, and they are more desirous than American citizens themselves to see that this house is cleansed, so that there will not be the slightest reflection cast upon them. I congratulate them upon their attitude, and I think they are entirely right in taking that position.

THE SEVENTH-PROVISO BILL

Mr. President, the seventh-proviso evil is quite important to discuss in order that the Department of Justice may escape the pitfalls that await them unless they know what was done by the Labor Department under the seventh proviso. It so happened that in preexamining an alien in order to advise him whether it would be worth his while to go out of the United States and seek an immigration visa with which to apply for lawful admission as an immigrant, it was sometimes found that there were grounds of exclusion existing in the alien's case, which would preclude him from obtaining an immigration visa from an American consular officer, and which would likewise preclude such an alien from being lawfully admitted even if he should succeed in deceiving the consular officer and obtain an immigration visa in an irregular manner.

The best justification for the pre-examination—our cart-before-the-horse procedure—if, indeed, there could be any justification at all for it, would seem to have been that it enabled the immigration authorities to weed out the undesirable elements among our illegally resident alien population and deport them. But that was not the fact, as the pre-examination procedure was not established with any idea or intent that the alien concerned would be deported. The pre-examination idea was conceived with a view to making examination of the immigrant applicant upon his native shores before coming to the United States. It was a procedure for getting an alien lawfully into our country if possible, and not one for getting undesirable aliens out. It was a procedure designed wholly for the benefit of the alien, and not for the benefit of the country. National self-interest majestically yielded to the individual interests of aliens and their representatives, friends, and attorneys in the United States. The statutes themselves were curried with a fine-toothed comb in an effort to find any loophole which would be large enough to take in all the undesirable classes of deportable aliens. Some legal light—I do not know who he was—found what is known as the seventh proviso in section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917. He dressed it up in a brand-new skirt of interpretation and put it to work in these cases.

The seventh proviso, which follows the list of excluded classes of aliens enumerated in section 3 of the act mentioned, reads as follows:

Provided further, That aliens returning after a temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile of 7 consecutive years may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and under such conditions as he may prescribe.

In other words, an alien who had resided in this country for 7 years consecutively and who went out of the country and then attempted to come back, might be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and under such conditions as the Secretary of Labor might then prescribe for his admission.

Mr. President, why could not this provision of law be so construed as to make it applicable to aliens who had resided in the United States illegally for 7 years? That is what the Department of Labor then began to consider. The seventh proviso provided that one who had lived here for 7 years—I believe the authors of the proviso had in mind an alien living here legally for 7 consecutive years—might be readmitted to the country. The Labor Department, in order to keep criminal aliens here—and if they could not be kept here, if they were deported, to send them to Canada and bring them back here—did what? It put one of its legal scouts to work scurrying the statutes of the country to ascertain how alien criminals could be kept here, so that they might continue to be supported by the taxpayers of the country. The legal scout found the seventh proviso. That legal scout, with his keen snout for a loophole to evade the immigration laws of the United States, particularly the seventh proviso of the law of 1917, said, "It is my opinion that this proviso can be so interpreted and construed as to readmit to this country one who has resided here for 7 years, regardless of whether or not he entered legally."

So, Mr. President, if the seventh proviso could be so construed, it would confer upon the Secretary of Labor the discretionary power—illegal, I say—to admit such aliens under any conditions she might deem or dream to be appropriate. It matters not that for a period of more than 15 years since its enactment this proviso had been construed, as I construed it a moment ago, to apply only to aliens who had established a lawful domicile in the United States. Such lawful domicile could not be established unless the alien had entered our borders legally. While there was, of course, no doubt that Congress had in mind a lawful domicile when the proviso was enacted, still Congress neglected so to state, and thus the application of the proviso to an unlawful domicile was inaugurated.

There are no court decisions holding that this proviso relates to a domicile unlawfully acquired. Why should there be any? On the other hand, if the immigration authorities decide that such is the proper construction of the law, how will any case ever get into the courts? Surely no alien will contest such a ruling in his favor. American citizens who are interested in the enforcement of our immigration laws have no right to intervene in such matters in order to see that the laws are properly construed and enforced. There are some court decisions to the effect that domicile in the United States cannot be predicated upon an illegal entry. In the case of the United States v. Parisi (24 Fed. Supp. 414) Federal Judge Chestnut stated that a—

Domicile within the United States cannot be properly based on an entry which is unlawful under the immigration laws.

In the case of Kaplan v. Todd (267 U. S. 228) the Supreme Court held that an alien could not be dwelling in the United States without having been lawfully admitted for permanent residence; but these cases also can be construed away if there is a will so to do, since there was no clear-cut issue in them regarding the true meaning and scope of the seventh proviso in section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917, and since our legislators did not embody in that proviso words to the effect that a domicile of 7 years must of necessity have been obtained by an immigrant who had legally entered.

To me, Mr. President, it is utterly inconceivable that Congress could ever have intended that the seventh proviso would be applicable in the case of an alien who had entered the United States in an illegal manner, because he was ineligible to enter in a lawful manner, and that by hiding out for a period of 7 years he could become eligible for lawful entry in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. Under the strained interpretation of the meaning and scope of the seventh proviso, the Department of Labor assumed the actual authority to deal with the cases of aliens illegally in the United States, who were ineligible under the law for entry in a lawful manner, and exercised the imaginary discretionary power to waive all kinds of grounds of exclusion in such cases in order that aliens might depart from the United States, procure suitable immigration visas somewhere else, and be admitted as immigrants for permanent residence, although under our laws they would not be admissible as permanent residents.

In some cases aliens who applied for preexamination were found to be excludable on one of the grounds mentioned in the law. They were told that they were not eligible for admission under the discretionary authority in the seventh proviso because they had not lived illegally in the United States for the necessary period of 7 consecutive years, but that if they kept on violating the law by remaining in the country illegally until the 7 years had passed they might come back and ask for seventh-proviso action in order to have all their sins washed away and their status purified by the seventh proviso. Such a perversion of our immigration laws by public servants sworn to enforce them can scarcely be conceived or realized.

However, in order to make the realization effective, reference may be made to the list—and I am coming to it—of more than 700 criminal aliens who were waived into the United States by the Department of Labor under the seventh proviso. Think of it. The Department of Labor, under the direction and in the discretion of the present Secretary of Labor, readmitted to this country 700 criminal aliens who had been apprehended, and whom we wanted to deport, but whom the Secretary of Labor did not want deported.

One of these aliens was previously deported from the United States because of his membership in the Communist Party. He reentered illegally, thereby committing a felony, for which he has never been prosecuted. The seventh proviso was invoked to wash him clean; he was sent to Mexico to procure an immigration visa. While his case was under consideration at an American consular office in that country he was readmitted into the United States without an immigration visa. He will, of course, be deportable under the Smith bill, which became the Registration Act of 1940 upon its approval by the President a few days ago and which provides for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens in the United States.

Mr. President, I was naturally highly elated when that bill was signed by the President of the United States and enacted into law, because for more than 5 years I have advocated in this body and also before the people of America by way of speeches on the platform and broadcasts over the radio measures which would enable this country to protect itself against certain influences by requiring the registration and fingerprinting of every noncitizen or alien as is done in other countries that have been more diligent about such matters than have we, but, unfortunately for me, I was never able to secure favorable action upon my bill. When I learned that Mr. HOWARD SMITH, the able Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Virginia, had introduced a bill of that kind with other provisions I was elated, particularly when I learned that the bill would come through the Judiciary Committee over there, as it did here; and when it was enacted into law I was pleased because I knew that the very thing I had fought for upon the floor of the Senate and throughout the broad expanses of this Nation at last had been realized. I was happy, Mr. President, because I knew certainly that in this emergency, of all times, we needed to ascertain who were our friends and who were our enemies, where our noncitizens were residing, whence they came, when they came, how they came, where they landed, whether legally or illegally, and, if they landed legally, whether or not they remained and are now here legally. Now that that bill will soon go into operation by reason of the administrative portions thereof on September 1, I shall feel that my country has been made more safe.

In passing I might add that at the present time we on the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate are now holding public hearings upon a bill designed to bring about compulsory registration for military selective service; and I recall that the bill requires that every male individual in the confines of the United States and its Territories between the ages of 18 and 65, American citizen or alien, shall register for such selective training service. I hope that the paragraph or section requiring likewise aliens to register will not be eliminated upon the theory or the ground or the arguments that we already have a mandatory registration and fingerprinting law applying to them.

I recognize, as does the able senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who does me the honor to listen so attentively, that the Smith bill is not a perfect bill; indeed, very few bills are perfect; and that in January there will be some suggestions by way of amendment through additional bills placed before the Members of this body for their attention designed to strengthen that law, for we know that aliens who are in this country illegally are not going voluntarily to present themselves at post offices or elsewhere for registration, knowing that the probabilities are that they will be forthwith deported. So additional legislation with a view to strengthening the Smith Act—and congratulations to Representative SMITH—will then be introduced.

Mr. President, some of the aliens on the list—and I have the information from the State Department at my request over the signature of an official of the State Department, so that there can be no question about it—have long been public charges in the United States and are still drawing relief at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. They are, of course, excludable under the law, but the excluding grounds in their cases have been waived by the Secretary of Labor under a perverted construction of the seventh proviso, as I have just explained. Other aliens on the list are afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; some have tuberculosis, which in itself is a ground of exclusion. But the great majority of the aliens are criminals of the worst type—thieves, embezzlers, smugglers, rapists, perjurers, forgerers, and the like. Are they any more desirable because they happen to have relatives in the United States?

They come in the same category and classification as thousands of alien criminals who have been kept in this country for years by the Secretary of Labor under the guise of classifying them as "hardship cases," which several years ago I brought to the attention of this body, as gathered from the files of the Department of Labor Immigration and Naturalization Division.

While the Federal Bureau of Investigation is, on the one hand, engaged in tracking down criminals in this country, it is fervently to be hoped that the Immigration and Naturalization Service, on the other hand, will stop setting aside our immigration and deportation laws in order to let more alien criminals into this country. We already have enough of them; we already have too many of them; and we will find certainly within a few years that we have too many, and then we will prick up our ears and think about this thing as concretely and as enthusiastically as we did a few days ago about the registration and fingerprinting measure, although a short time prior to its enactment many people doubted that we would be so cruel as to fingerprint the poor little aliens in our midst, when many of these poor little aliens were all the time boring from within while we remained the big sap of the world, as we have always remained insofar as aliens of this character are concerned.

Mr. President, both these arms or hands of the Government are now under one head, the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Jackson, the chief law officer of the executive branch of the Government. If he is unable to reverse the interpretation of the seventh proviso adopted by the Labor Department, he is, at least, able to exercise his discretion more circumspectly and to prevent the abuse of that discretion which has marked the administration of the law by the Department of Labor.

Mr. President, it is understood that the pre-examination procedure of the Department of Labor has been discontinued by the Department of Justice. At least, I recall having observed an article in one of the local newspapers several days ago in reference to that by way of an interview which came from the Attorney General.

The Smith bill, as I said a moment ago, made this step necessary upon its enactment, since the second paragraph in section 30, title III, of that bill, which became the Registration Act of 1940, as mentioned a moment ago, when it was approved by the President on June 28, 1940, reads as follows:

> Any alien seeking to enter the United States who does not present a visa (except in emergency cases defined by the Secretary of State), a reentry permit, or a border-crossing identification card shall be excluded from admission to the United States.

It will no longer be, by any stretch of the imagination, legally permissible for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to do what? To promise to accept an illegally resident alien back into the United States without a visa, as was promised prior to the admission of aliens back into the United States by the present Secretary of Labor.

Mr. President, in reference to that subject, let me say that I had heard of this violation, as I claim, of our immigration laws by our Secretary of Labor. I had heard that our present Secretary of Labor had been misconstruing the seventh proviso of the Immigration Act of 1917 by permitting alien criminals to leave this country to go to Canada or Mexico and get a reentry visa and come back into this country, whereas if application initially had been made by them under the immigration laws they would not have been permitted to come here. I could not conceive of a high executive of the Government assuming to place upon the seventh proviso of that act the interpretation which was placed upon it by the Secretary of Labor. I was actually appalled when I learned what had been done, in the face of the fact that we have in this country more crime than is found in any other country upon the face of the earth; that we have in this country more alien criminals than are to be found in any other country upon the face of the earth; in the face of the fact that we have too many criminals of our own, without maintaining and coddling the alien criminals of other lands; but it was done. So I took up the matter with the Department of State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the observation made by the Senator that the present Secretary of Labor permitted alien criminals who had come to the United States to go to Canada or to some other country, and then, I suppose, after they had obtained a passport or a visa, received them back into the United States.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; permitted them to reenter. I will say to the able Senator from Utah, whom I know to be very much interested in this subject and its relation to subversive activities, that I am informed that it was understood that there was an agreement, or, rather, an understanding—because an agreement would have been considered a treaty, and the Senate would have had to pass upon the treaty—that if the other countries concerned did not permit the aliens to come across their borders, we would take them back. In other words, there was an understanding to the effect that if the countries referred to would not permit visas to be issued to the criminals delivered to them to come back into this country, we would take them back, thus sparing embarrassment and expense to the countries to which they had gone.

Mr. KING. May I further inquire whether the crimes of which these persons were guilty were malum in se or merely malum prohibitum? I can conceive, possibly, of the Secretary of Labor permitting a person to leave the United States and afterward reenter it who had violated some act which was not malum in se, but was merely malum prohibitum; some ordinance or some act which did not involve moral turpitude.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly, as the Senator knows, an alien coming into the United States illegally is classed as a felon. That is the classification under which such aliens fall.

In answer to the Senator's question, I desire now to bring to his attention the names of some of the aliens to whom I refer; and I shall recite the crimes of which they were convicted. I will say to the Senator that what I am about to bring to his attention is not hearsay. I did not want to make any statement in regard to what I had heard, or what somebody had told me which he had heard from somebody else; so I obtained this information officially from the State Department. I paid several personal visits to that Department; and in order to have my interest of an official nature in the form of a record, I directed a communication in confirmation of personal statements I had made and conversations I had had over the telephone.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator means that the persons who left the United States had been guilty of felonies, and that they went to some foreign country, obtained visas and came back again, notwithstanding the fact that they had been branded as criminals by reason of having committed felonies rather than violations of some unimportant regulation?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Quite so; and that was permitted to be done under what I claim to be a legal misinterpretation of the statute itself.

Mr. President, I have before me and I now read from a letter upon the letterhead of the Department of State, Washington, D. C. This letter is dated June 1, 1940. In the left-hand corner it says:

Address official communications to the Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

In type directly beneath the seal:

In reply refer to VD 150.07/172.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: With further reference to your letter of April 29, 1940, I enclose herewith in accordance with your request a list of aliens whose admission into the United States has been authorized by the Secretary of Labor under the seventh proviso in section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

With which I am confident the Senator from Utah is fully familiar, because I understand that the able Senator took a very active part in those matters when we were bringing about the enactment of that necessary legislation.

The grounds of exclusion which were waived in each case—

Mind you—

The grounds of exclusion which were waived in each case—

Waived by authority of the Secretary of Labor, I add—are indicated opposite each name on the list and explained in the footnotes at the end of the list, which is cumulative to this date, and practically, although not entitrely, complete.

The file number of the Department of Labor in any of the cases listed will be furnished upon your request.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:

BRECKENRIDGE LONG,
Assistant Secretary.

Enclosure:
List of aliens.

That is where we become vitally interested. We want to see what the Secretary of Labor has been doing. We are pointing out these things in order that the Department of Justice, under whose direction this law will be administered from now on, shall not encounter any hazards or pitfalls.

Here is the list. I read:

List of aliens whose admission into the United States has been authorized by the Secretary of Labor and the grounds of exclusion which have been waived in each case under the Department of Labor's interpretation of the discretionary authority contained in the seventh proviso in section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

I repeat, and I emphasize, and I recall to the attention of the Senators who do me the honor to listen, that the crimes of those whose names I shall read, respectively and at length, were waived by the Secretary of Labor. They follow. I shall first read the alien's name, and then I shall read the grounds of exclusion, the grounds that were waived, and then I shall leave to the sound judgment of the American people whether or not I have been right during the past 5 years, from day to day and from week to week, in demanding that our representatives in the Government deport alien criminals who are trying to destroy our Government, the same alien criminals who unquestionably will indulge in sabotage and espionage.

LIST OF ALIENS WHOSE ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES HAS BEEN AUTHORIZED BY THE SECRETARY OF LABOR AND THE GROUNDS OF EXCLUSION WHICH HAVE BEEN WAIVED IN EACH CASE UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR'S INTERPRETATION OF THE DISCRETIONARY AUTHORITY CONTAINED IN THE SEVENTH PROVISO IN SECTION 3 OF THE IMMIGRATION ACT OF FEBRUARY 5, 1917

Mr. President, these aliens were indicted for virtually every crime on the statute books, including theft and smuggling. I call attention to the list at this time in order that the American people may know that under a misinterpretation of the seventh proviso, alien criminals, violators of our laws, were permitted to reenter the county.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senator from North Carolina is well aware of the fact that I am in agreement with the aims and purposes of his work through the years on the immigration question. I wish to call to the attention of the Senate Order No. 1166, on the calendar, Senate Resolution 168, which provides for an investigation of the immigration of aliens into the United States. Repeatedly, I have tried to have this resolution considered, and repeatedly it has been objected to when reached on the unanimous Consent Calendar.

The question which now arises in my mind, and on which I should like to have the opinion of the able and patriotic Senator from North Carolina, is: Did the recent transfer of the Immigration Bureau from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice obviate or make unnecessary the further consideration of this resolution to investigate the criminal aliens in the United States?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be advised whether the Senator believes the resolution should be brought up and the purpose of it still effectuated.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It certainly should be effectuated, and I think that Congress should make an appropriation in a sum sufficient to pay any expenses which might be incurred in making the full and complete and exhaustive investigation, to be conducted by the committee, which the Senator's resolution would initiate.

Mr. HOLMAN. An appropriation was authorized by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in the sum of $10,000, and I was not inclined to debate the amount. I was of the opinion that if we could get the investigation under way, it might be concluded within that figure, and if not, sufficient progress would be made to justify further appropriations. I serve notice, if I may, that at the first opportunity I shall call the resolution up for consideration.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say unhesitatingly that merely by the presentation of the resolution itself the Senator has evidenced that he is far-sighted. He has unquestionably made a step in the right direction, which is forward. I believe that $10,000 would be sufficient to launch the investigation, and I am absolutely certain that after it had been launched under the direction of the able Senator from Oregon, Congress itself, as well as the American people, would realize that the things revealed as a result of the investigation were well worth the $10,000 expended, and that more would be appropriated later for the same purpose.

Of all times, now is the time when we should make an investigation of the immigration problem in general, first, because we have but recently passed a registration and fingerprinting act which is designed for the registration of all aliens in the United States, whether they entered legally or illegally, so that we may ascertain how many are here and where they are.

Mr. DIES, the able chairman of the special committee of the House, once stated in an interview in Chicago that he was of the opinion that there were 7,000,000 aliens in the United States. Mr. Houghteling, Commissioner of Immigration, stated that in his opinion there are about 3,600,000 in this country. No one knows how many there are, and we will not know how many there are after the administration of the Smith Act, because many hundreds of thousands no doubt will evade registration, knowing that upon apprehension, or submission, for that matter, action would be taken to deport them.

The second reason why the resolution should be adopted and an investigation begun at once is that there is pending before the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs a bill which it is said is for the development of Alaska, that vast Territory of about 544,000 square miles, with a population of 58,000 people, about thirty-five or forty thousand of whom, as I recall, are Eskimos. Some interests wanted us to open up Alaska to 100,000 refugees so as to develop that Territory.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. Does it not occur to the Senator that since we have transferred to another department the control of immigration, and also have considered measures, some of which have passed and some of which are pending, to regulate the entry of foreigners and their deportation, the Senate should wait until we see what effect those measures will have, and how they work, before we begin to investigate something which is already provided for?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator immensely for the inquiry, but I am distressed to have to disagree with him, for the reason that we have enacted about one one-hundredth as much legislation in reference to subversive activities, "fifth columns," limitation of immigration, and deportation of alien criminals as we should have enacted, or at least as I would have enacted had I a lone hand in bringing about the enactment of such laws.

For instance, let me say to the Senator that I have pending a bill which would stop all immigration into this country for the next 10 years, until such time as every American citizen who is employable has been employed. I insist upon the enactment of that bill for the benefit of American laboring men, 11,000,000 of whom are out of work at this time, 25,000,000 of whom are working only part time, 2,700,000 of whom are on W. P. A. and would like to be engaged in private industry; as well as for the benefit of 300,000 young men in the C. C. C. camps who would like to find remunerative employment outside, and 750,000 fine boys and girls who last June were graduated from our high schools, colleges, and universities, many thousands of whom cannot now find employment. That is one bill I want passed, and I have innumerable others, and I can think of more and more which should be passed for the benefit of this country.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to have the Senator direct a question to me, and I shall, if possible, answer it.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in view of present conditions and in view of our hope that many of our unemployed may obtain employment, he does not think a great many will be employed by industries which have become very busy because of national-defense preparations. Would not such a bill as the Senator mentions, which would shut off immigration from any nation, be rather drastic, and would it not be perhaps offensive to other countries with whom we desire to retain peaceful relations?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not think so at all, because other countries personally consider what is best for themselves, and they say, "To hell with any other country. What we are interested in is our own people and our own country."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am always interested in hearing the Senator from North Carolina speak on this subject, because he has such a fund of information and has given so much study to it. Does not the Senator think, however, that the recent legislation which Congress enacted, originating in the House of Representatives, but wholly rewritten in the Senate by the addition of requirements that all aliens in the United States shall be fingerprinted and registered, will go a great way toward solving some of our problems relating to aliens?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Unquestionably, and I say to the distinguished Senator that I am very happy he rose at this time, because I wanted the opportunity of extending to the people of Texas my congratulations upon their having sent him to the Senate of the United States, and I wish to say now from the floor of the Senate—and, inspired by the presence in the chair of the great representative from Kentucky, I trust my words will reach the ears of every man and every woman who is qualified to vote in the State of Texas—that it is my hope and my sincere desire that they will vote, in the coming election, for that champion of American rights, that great American patriot, the junior Senator from Texas, who has done as much for the American laboring man and the American people as any other man ever did, and who did as much for our national defense as any other Member of this body, or any other legislative body ever did, when he championed HOWARD SMITH'S bill, originating in the House of Representatives, and which came to the Judiciary Committee of this body, from which it was reported and then passed by the Senate. As a result of my personal interest in the people of Texas and the people of this Nation, I hope the people of Texas will send the junior Senator back to the Senate, so that he may continue to fight for the American people and the American Nation, for he is one who thinks first of the United States of America, and then, after they are provided for in his great charity, he thinks of the people of the whole world.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I merely wish to say to my friend the Senator from North Carolina that I am also running for the Senate this year. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I know that my distinguished friend likewise supported the registration and fingerprinting bill, and I congratulate him, and I congratulate the people of his State, and, loving him as I do, having a deep and sincere affection and admiration for his courage and willingness always to see the light, I hope likewise that the grand people of the great State of Indiana will never turn their hearts from him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is certainly welcome. I shall expect the same treatment from the Senator from Indiana, and I shall expect the same from the Senator from Texas when 4 years from now I seek to be returned to the Senate of the United States. [Laughter.] I do not want those Senators to forget that.

I now yield again to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, words fail me to express my gratitude for the accolade which the Senator from North Carolina has bestowed upon my distinguished friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and also on my humble self. I wish to remind the Senator, however, that only today another subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary held a hearing on the so-called bund bill, requiring the registration with the Attorney General of all organizations having foreign affiliations or carrying on political or military activities, and wearing uniforms. Under that bill all organizations in that category must register with the Attorney General and file their bylaws and constitutions, if they have any, so that the United States Government may have an opportunity to check up on the activities of all so-called American institutions which have an American front and an alien background. I wanted the Senator from North Carolina to know that we are going right along in the same direction.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to hear that, and I know that the American people will be glad to learn of it. We have too long coddled alien criminals and undesirables and those who are affiliated with subversive organizations.

I may say to the distinguished Senator from Texas in connection with and parallel with the bill which his committee is now considering, that about 3 weeks ago I submitted a resolution which would outlaw in this country the Communist Party, nazi bunds, and any organizations with Fascist tendencies.

In addition to that I submitted a resolution which would prohibit any labor-union organization from having as its agent or as an officer or as a representative, any alien or anyone who was a member of the Communist Party, the Nazi Bund, or any other similar organization, or any American citizen who had been convicted of a felony and was thereby deprived of American citizenship.

So, if I may be pardoned for using every-day parlance, the bill to which the Senator from Texas referred is "right up my alley." I want to see the measures I have sponsored passed. I have no pride of authorship, but if any of my measures can be passed I want to see them passed. But if some other bill, such as the Howard Smith fingerprinting bill, is considered, I shall support it as enthusiastically as I would support my own bills. I am trying to do my part to preserve America for Americans.

Mr. President, I have before me a very able address delivered by Mr. William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor. When I was in New York last week investigating subversive activities, the "fifth columns," Trojan horses, and looking over the alien enemies, and watching cases tried at Ellis Island Immigration Station, I was in the office of Mr. Herbert Moore. Mr. Moore is president of the Trans-Radio News Corporation. He was showing me around his place and how they gathered the news by ticker, and as I looked at one of the tickers there came over the wire in type-printed form an item to the effect that President William Green had made a statement in reference to those persons in our country who would destroy our form of government. It was a short paragraph. When I returned to Washington I sent for a copy of Mr. Green's statement, and I am glad I did. I read the entire text of his address and I was inspired and encouraged by it. He made it at the graduating exercises of the National Police Academy conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I shall read a portion relating to the particular subject which has been mentioned by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I read it not only for the reason that the Senator from Texas brought up the subject, but for the reason that I have introduced bills which would outlaw the Communist Party, the Nazi bund, which would prohibit the employment by the Government of aliens and members of the Communist Party or the Nazi bund. I know that the American Federation of Labor does not want Communists in its ranks.

Here is what Mr. Green said, and I was very happy to read it, but I was not surprised that Mr. Green had made such a statement, knowing him as I do and as I have for a number of years. I have always possessed a great admiration for him. This is what he said:

> There is no more room for criminals and racketeers in the labor movement of this country than there is in the police forces of our cities, States, and Nation.

William Green said that.

The American Federation of Labor is not a police organization; it is a fraternal body of trade unions. We do not have the facilities, the equipment, the staff, or the legal authority necessary to investigate, try, and punish wrongdoers who may have crept into our movement. That is the function of the police, the law-enforcement authorities, and the courts.

I call upon you, as representative police officials from every section of the Nation, to perform this function and stamp out racketeering wherever it may exist in union organizations just as fearlessly as you would stamp out racketeering in business or in any other walk of life.

As President of the American Federation of Labor, I assure you of the assistance and support in that endeavor of our State federations of labor in every State and of our central labor councils in more than 810 cities. These local organizations of ours are officered by a fine group of honorable American citizens. It would pay you to learn to know them better, for they will be glad to help you and cooperate with you in any public-spirited undertaking.

As a final word on this subject let me say this: If you meet a situation in the elimination of wrongdoing where you believe I can be of help to you, call on me promptly, and I assure you that I will do everything that lies within my power to further the cause of justice.

In these days of world upheaval there falls upon the law-enforcement branch of our Government a new and difficult duty. In addition to your regular job of keeping the peace, you, the police officials of our country, are now confronted with the novel problem—novel, at least, in America—of defending our Nation against traitors in our midst.

I hold these truths to be self-evident:

Listen, please, Senators—

1. That the various brands of totalitarianism which have engulfed Continental Europe—whether their label be Nazi, Communist, or Fascist—are hostile to America and to everything which Americans hold dear. They are contradictory to our form of government.

2. That these enemies of America have conquered free, democratic nations and instituted a reign of terror over almost an entire continent not alone by force of arms but by a carefully planned campaign of organized treachery.

Which I assert to be through the Trojan horses, which as enemies within various countries have been galloping everywhere over there, and also through "fifth columnists."

3. That here in America the totalitarian nations of Europe have established thriving branches and are encouraging their followers to weaken the morale of the United States in every way they can.

4. That such traitorous activities must be stopped by every legal means in the interests of national safety and national defense.

Toward this end, I advocate that the Communist Party and the Nazi bund in this country be outlawed by Congress.

All praise to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

I claim no personal familiarity with police methods. I understand they have been thoroughly modernized. I have been informed that in addition to the first principles of persuasion—powerful as they may be—present-day crime detectors have acquired a full complement of scientific equipment and a wide range of psychological processes of deduction. There is no doubt in my mind or in anyone else's that these new developments in the field of law enforcement have been highly effective. And, I might add, in my opinion a large share of the credit for making police work so much more efficient in this country is due to my friend, J. Edgar Hoover, and the splendid record achieved by the Federal Bureau of Investigation under his direction.

Mr. Green is deserving of great and unstinted praise, for he has done more to provide inspiration for the youngsters of our country and done more to throw fear into the very souls, if they have any, of these criminals, than any other one man or aggregation of men we have ever had in our midst.

Mr. Green continues:

But when it comes to dealing with treachery and "fifth column" activities modern techniques will be of no use to the policeman unless he is backed by the full power of the law.

On May 1, in Moscow, the Communist Internationale issued a May Day manifesto for the instruction and enlightenment of Communist agents and followers in North and South America. This manifesto accused Great Britain, France, and the United States of "imperialism." It also urged Communists in the Americas to campaign for peace and for maintenance of civil liberties here.

Only a few hours later, Communist paraders in several American cities displayed brand-new placards carrying out the instructions from Moscow. The placards read "The Yanks are not coming," and "Defend civil liberties." There also were a few placards denouncing the F. B. I. The Communists were shrewd enough to soft-pedal the "imperialism" charge in this country. They emphasized it, however, in Cuba, in Central America, and in South America where such propaganda was calculated to inflame public opinion in our neighboring republics against the United States. And, lo and behold, the Nazi organizations in these countries worked, hand in glove with the Communists in spreading such false propaganda.

In the face of such evidence of treachery, I feel that we are inviting danger by permitting the Communist Party and the Nazi bund to continue to operate openly or secretly in this country against the interests of the United States.

All of us agree with William Green when he says that we should wipe from our portion of the North American Continent every Communist and Nazi organization.

Mr. Green continues:

The American Federation of Labor is a thoroughly American organization. We have never been hoodwinked by Communist, Nazi, or Fascist propaganda. We have never compromised with the foes of the United States, and we never will.

I say, thank God for that.

When the President of the United States asked us to support the transfer of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice so that the Government could deal with "fifth column" activities more effectively, we cheerfully gave our approval despite our standing policy of opposing any curtailment of the authority of the Department of Labor.

When the Congress of the United States recently adopted measures to purge Communists and Nazis from relief rolls and to keep an official check on the whereabouts and activities of resident aliens, the American Federation of Labor interposed no objections.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the Senator notice in one of yesterday's newspapers that a Communist petition in New York City had been signed by two members of the police force of New York City and by several other city officials?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am appalled to know that. It is difficult for me to conceive of an American citizen, particularly one in an official capacity whose duty it is to provide protection to the American people in the neighborhood in which he resides, being a member of the Communist Party, which is opposed to everything for which our democratic form of government stands.

Mr. President, in connection with my discussion of the Nazis and the Communist Party, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the New York Daily Mirror of July 6, 1940, entitled "Time for 'Rough on Rats'—A Case of Smash or Be Smashed."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Daily Mirror of July 6, 1940]

TIME FOR "ROUGH ON RATS"

It took a bomb to wake up this city to the dangers of the Communists, Fascists, and Nazis in America. It cost the lives of two able members of the bomb squad to convince the police department that alien-minded rats are a far greater menace than the "punks, pimps, and touts" that Mayor LaGuardia has pledged himself to exterminate. We hope that the skilled legal minds of District Attorneys Dewey, O'Dwyer, and Sullivan will turn to smashing these groups that fight with bombs on orders from Europe.

A CASE OF "SMASH OR BE SMASHED"

The bomb that rocked the fair and killed two, perhaps four, detectives, was the first that has killed anybody in 20 years in the New York area. Last time was in 1920, when a bomb exploded in front of the Wall Street offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., during noon rush hour and killed 33 people.

But bombs are only the crude and spectacular symptoms of a far deeper and greater danger to the American system of democracy.

Bombs are no more the most dangerous weapons of anarchy than Fourth of July fireworks are the most powerful weapons of democracy.

Like the bombs that exploded under the Nazi consulate and in the offices of the Daily Worker 2 weeks ago, the time bomb at the fair was certainly planted by some agent of an alien group.

It is quite possible that all three bombs were planted by the same person, and that the ones under the Nazis and in the lap of the Worker might easily have been planted by either Nazis or Communists. You note that neither of those two bombs actually killed anybody.

But they had served a more insidious purpose; they made Americans bomb conscious; they stirred up hates and fears and suspicions.

They created the kind of confusion that breeds riots; the class warfare, the strife between races which sapped the strength of France and left only disunity and treachery.

Very well, if they want to incite us to violence, let us vent our violence on them.

Smash every Communist, Fascist, and Nazi organization. Let this State take the lead in making membership in any of these organizations treasonable and punishable by death in time of war, by long imprisonment in time of peace.

Outlaw the bund and the Communist Party; the leaders of both organizations are now convicted criminals. It is fantastic to think that Communist Browder is permitted to run for President.

It is shocking to think that the Bund is permitted to keep publishing a paper which calls itself the Free American. It is shocking to think that the Communists are permitted to go on publishing the Daily Worker. Why should Americans permit destructive doctrines to be peddled on tax-paved streets, carried by tax-supported railroads? "Freedom of treason" is not in the Bill of Rights.

ALTERNATIVE: THE FATE OF FRANCE

The publications of all alien-financed or controlled groups should be driven from the country immediately.

Members of these groups should be driven from the country, on pain of prison if they remain.

There is an alternative: "Take it easy," as France did. But look what happened to France.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, pending action on the nominations of Mr. Stimson and Colonel Knox, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped that we might dispose of the nomination under consideration today, but it is obvious that we cannot obtain a vote on it this afternoon. I hope that early tomorrow we may be able to conclude the consideration of Mr. Stimson's nomination, as well as that of Colonel Knox. Therefore, I now move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow. We shall proceed tomorrow in executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 9, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of mercies, teach us to love Thy sacred word, and may we find our Saviour there; joined in one spirit, let us ever walk with Him. We thank Thee that our times are in Thine hands. Let the wounds and the sufferings of Him who died that we might live admonish us and gently woo us on to God. Enable us to conserve all the powers we possess for the better and the nobler pursuits of life. Impress us that there are no errors in Thy eternal scheme, and that Thy goodness and mercy will follow us all our days. Under all circumstances, hearing the call of our country, inspire us to obey the voices of our better selves, so shall we have the approval of our fellows and hear the "Well done" of our Father in Heaven. We rejoice that beneath the spreading heavens there is a good God, and He who clothes the lilies and feeds the ravens will clothe and feed His people, too. In the name of the everlasting Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 4, 1940, was read and approved.

FURNISHING OF FACTUAL INFORMATION ON PREPAREDNESS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 542

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives at such time as may be convenient prior to the adjournment of the present session of Congress such factual information as may be definitely available showing administrative action on the program of preparedness for national defense.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the request?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read was offered some days ago in the House and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee, I believe by unanimous vote, has made an adverse report on it, as did the War Department, and in the absence of the chairman I have been asked to call this up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who introduced the resolution?

Mr. THOMASON. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALL]. There is an adverse report from both the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wonder if the gentleman from New York knows it is coming up at this time?

Mr. THOMASON. I assume he does, because the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is out of the city, and he asked me to present it at this time. The committee is asking that the resolution be tabled.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman mind withdrawing his request for a few minutes?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the moment.

DISPOSITION, CONTROL, AND USE OF SURPLUS REAL PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7233) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide for the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies, and for other purposes,' approved August 27, 1935 (Public, No. 351, 74th Cong.), and for other purposes," with Senate amendments thereto and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "an" and insert "the first section of the."

Page 1, line 8, strike out all after "amended" down to and including "or" in line 3, on page 2, and insert "by inserting, before the period at the end thereof, a colon and the following: 'Provided, That if no bids which are satisfactory as to price and."

Page 2, line 10, strike out "At the end of the act add" and insert "Such act of August 27, 1935, is further amended by adding at the end thereof."

Page 4, line 1, after "buildings" insert "of his determination as to whether such building is an historic building of national significance."

Page 4, strike out lines 4 to 12, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 3. Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, of such act of August 27, 1935, are amended (a) by striking out the words 'Secretary of the Treasury' wherever they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Federal Works Administrator'; (b) by striking out the words 'Director of Procurement' wherever they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Commissioner of Public Buildings'; (c) by striking out the words 'Procurement Division' wherever they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Public Buildings Administration.' "

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what the amendments are?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which has passed both the House and Senate and has to do with the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies. The amendments placed in the bill by the Senate are purely clerical and do not affect the purposes of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURNISHING OF FACTUAL INFORMATION ON PREPAREDNESS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that House Resolution 542 be tabled.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, does not the committee want the country to know what the President has done with all the money that we have given him for war purposes in the last 4 or 5 years? It would seem strange to me if the public did not want to know.

Mr. THOMASON. That is not the question. This is a question of asking the President to disclose all war secrets, whatever they may be. It is not a question of checking up on the money. The committee has unanimously made this recommendation and also the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the House unanimously adopted a bill, the so-called national-defense bill, to which an amendment was attached making it mandatory for the President to report on the whole matter at the beginning of any subsequent regular or special session. The Senate accepted the House amendment. In the opinion of the Military Affairs Committee that is all that should be practically required at this time.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me we ought to know what the President has been spending this money for. He says we are not prepared. The Nation ought to know when and where he spent seven, eight, or ten billion dollars. We ought to get something for our money.

Mr. THOMASON. That has nothing to do with this resolution.

Mr. RICH. It certainly has.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be tabled.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Keene Evening Sentinel, of Keene, N. H., with reference to New Hampshire's good friend and neighbor, Dr. PLUMLEY, of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself today to an analysis of why Congress is in session at this time.

Usually the session of Congress, before election, is terminated so that the Members may get home, build their political fences, and thus have a chance to tell their constituents why they should be reelected.

The fundamental reason why Congress is in session at this time is because the great majority of the people of this country want to be kept out of war. By having Congress in session and in possession of the power to control the declaration of war, the large majority of the people feel that Congress will heed the mandate of the people and really keep this country in peace.

This is a serious obligation to those of us who are old-fashioned enough to still believe that the "will of the people is the law of the land" and do not yet subscribe to the superman philosophy of the New Deal.

If the foregoing deduction as to why Congress is in session is correct, then, I ask in all seriousness, why should any political party hesitate to adopt a plank in its platform that is straightforward, honest, and sincere in regard to peace, as the Republican Party has already done?

Statesmanship is common sense and common justice. Common sense and common justice require that each and every one of us heed this most evident mandate of the people and work for peace and preparedness. By staying in session we hope to accomplish these objectives. [Applause.]

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, there are still 365 days in a year, 24 hours in a day, 60 minutes in an hour, or 525,600 minutes in a year. The New Deal has not changed our calendar as yet. Last year the New Deal went in the red $3,741,249,136, the third largest deficit in the Nation's history in peacetime. This means that you are $7,118.07 in the red every minute. I just figured it out. The way the New Deal is starting to spend money in this year of the administration beginning July 1 under the guise of national defense is terrible. It is deceptive, it is dishonest, because all the money does not go for preparedness. It goes for New Deal folly, New Deal waste, and inefficiency. The New Deal is going to carry on the very things the New Deal has been advocating for 7 years—7 years of deficits.

The deficits

1933	$2,245,453,000
1934	3,255,393,000
1935	3,782,966,000
1936	4,952,929,000
1937	3,252,540,000
1938	1,449,626,000
1939	3,600,514,000
1940	3,741,249,000
	26,280,670,000

The most ruthless expenditure of money in the world's history—waste, extravagance, inefficiency. This waste will have to be paid by future generations. The administration wants you to believe the new tax bill is for national defense. It is for the waste of the past 7 years and you will have to have more taxes to pay for this waste and extravagance. What are you going to do to put 10,000,000 people back to work? Willkie will do it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

CITY OF DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, if the figures which have just been presented to me by the Redford Record in regard to the census of the city of Detroit, Mich., are correct—and I have no reason to doubt their accuracy—a most unusual situation has presented itself. The city of Detroit has gained approximately 50,000 people in the last 10 years. Of these 50,000 people, 46,777 have moved into the twenty-second ward of that city, which is in my congressional district, the Seventeenth Congressional District of Michigan, which I have the honor to represent. More than 90 percent of the entire increase in the population of the fourth city of the United States has been due to people moving into my congressional district. The population of Detroit in 1930 was 1,568,662, and in 1940 it is 1,618,549, an increase of 49,887. This must testify to the splendid qualities, the advantages, and the desirability of that district, in which people can reside and have a happy home. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a petition signed by three residents of my district, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein separately a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief statement I made over the radio last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two different places on the subject of pollution and to include therein sundry newspaper comments, letters, and statements received on the subject of pollution control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

BOULDER DAM

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make a statement with reference to a bill now pending in conference (H. R.

9877) commonly known as the Boulder Canyon Dam bill. It appears that the conferees are very anxious to try to reach an agreement on this matter. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] is absent. I have a telegram from him offering his resignation as a member of the committee of conference. In view of the circumstances, the Chair designates the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] as a conferee on the part of the House, and the resignation of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] is accepted. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the Speaker of the House.

PAYMENTS TO STATE AND TERRITORIAL SOLDIERS' HOMES

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9875) to provide that payments made to States or Territories to aid in the maintenance of disabled veterans in State and Territorial homes shall be used solely for such purpose, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 24, sec. 134), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "All such payments shall be deposited in a special fund and shall be used solely to aid in the maintenance of disabled soldiers and sailors admitted to such homes."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPUBLICAN PARTY LYNCHED!

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, several days ago the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] made a statement on this floor that I feel impelled to correct. He said there had not been a lynching in the United States during the year 1940.

I am sure the gentleman from Alabama was thoroughly sincere in making that statement, but I want to call his attention to the fact that we had one of the greatest demonstrations of mob violence in history when the Power Trust lynched the Republican Party at Philadelphia a few days ago. [Laughter and applause.]

DISTRICT DAY

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day.

FURNISHING OF POTOMAC WATER WITHOUT CHARGE TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3870) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions, and so forth, in the District of Columbia," approved February 23, 1905.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this bill seek to do?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania—and I was going to seek recognition to explain briefly the provisions of the measure—I will state that under the District of Columbia Code, as approved February 23, 1905, Potomac River water is furnished to churches free of charge. This bill would amend that act to include charitable institutions which do not have inmates. It is simply an amendment to that act. An organization such as the boys' clubs would be helped.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of the first section of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish Potomac water without charge to charitable institutions, etc., in the District of Columbia," approved February 23, 1905 (D. C. Code, title 20, sec. 1403), is amended by inserting therein after the word "churches" the following: "and to charitable institutions which do not have inmates."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition on the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss the provisions of the pending legislation because, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I explained that the measure is a very simple one and is meritorious, and I am sure the House will pass it. I take this time to say to the membership of the House that in connection with the figures just announced on the standings of various cities as to population, it is shown that Washington, D. C., or the District of Columbia, has had the largest percentage of increase in population in the last 10 years of any of the cities of the United States, and I do feel that regardless of the reasons for this increase [laughter] I believe all Members of this House, regardless of which side of the aisle they sit on, are in agreement that we desire to see the city of Washington as it grows in population also grow in beauty and strength and in the affection of the American people. I think it is highly important these days that the one-hundred-and-thirty-million-odd American men, women, and children of our Republic should increasingly realize that the Capital of the United States is a capital which serves as a center and as a means and as an expression of the thoughts of all the liberty-loving citizens of this Nation.

I call the attention of the Members today to the fact that we who represent various sections of the country are interested not alone in the increased population of our own States and of our own districts, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] has just called attention to in stating that his district has had a good increase, but here in the Nation's Capital, when there comes an increase in population, let us hope and let us trust and let us believe that the Capital continues as a finest expression of the faith of a great America. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I noticed this morning on I Street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets, that they are cutting down some very beautiful oak trees, from 30 to 40 or 50 years old. Of course, I realize they are going to widen the street and that they are cutting those trees down in order to facilitate the progress of automobiles. Sometimes I wonder whether we are not destroying a great deal of the beauty of Washington for a greater efficiency in commercialism. Who is responsible for this destruction of beautiful trees? The authorities of Washington should be very careful that they do not permit commercialism to enter into the city of Washington to the extent that it will destroy her beauty.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania raises an important question. I do think that the officials who govern the District of Columbia should carefully consider any changes made so that we may not mar the beauty here. At the same time we can bring about a proper utilization of our present facilities.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Could the gentleman inform the House just what is being done to stop the proposed underpass on Sixteenth Street and Massachusetts Avenue?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am very glad the gentleman from Michigan has raised that question.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Because in constructing that they are certainly going to ruin a great many trees, and I do not believe that it will facilitate the traffic very much.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not believe they will facilitate traffic very much by an underpass there, and requests have been made that the Commissioners give these people a thorough hearing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(c) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall provide, for the use of the Board, such office space as shall be reasonably necessary for carrying out the provisions and to effectuate the purposes of this act. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia shall act as counsel for the Board but without added compensation for his services as such.

(d) The Board is hereby authorized and empowered to receive, and the Anatomical Board of the District of Columbia (32 Stat. 174, ch. 638, sec. 9) is hereby authorized to deliver, under the terms and conditions of the act creating said Anatomical Board of the District of Columbia, to said Board, a sufficient number of dead human bodies for the purpose of enabling said Board to conduct the examinations in funeral directing and embalming provided for in this act.

SEC. 8. The Board shall hold an examination in funeral directing and an examination in embalming not less frequently than once a year and at such other times as the Board may by rule or special order determine. The Board shall publish notice of the time and place of each examination not less than 30 days before the date of said examination in one or more daily newspapers of general circulation in the District of Columbia.

Such license or licenses shall be signed by the president and the secretary-treasurer of the Board, to which license shall be affixed the seal of said Board, and such license or licenses shall be nontransferable and nonassignable; and such license or licenses shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business conducted by the licensee or where the licensee is employed.

Such privileges shall not include the establishment of a place of business in the District of Columbia for the purpose of engaging in the business or profession of funeral directing or embalming nor the acceptance of employment as a funeral director or embalmer with a District of Columbia funeral director or embalmer until duly licensed in accordance with the provisions of this act.

He also shall submit proof satisfactory to the Board that the jurisdiction whence he comes grants, without examination, to licentiates of the District of Columbia of the same class, licenses to practice funeral directing or embalming within its jurisdiction. Such proof having been made to the satisfaction of the Board, the Board shall cause the name of such person to be registered as a funeral director or embalmer, or both, in a book provided for that purpose and kept by the secretary-treasurer of the Board, and upon the payment of the fee of $10 per license shall issue a license or licenses to such person. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall be renewed annually on or before the 1st day of July of each year upon the payment of an annual fee of $10.

In case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpena issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the Board, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpena and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

SEC. 21. All fees and charges payable under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the secretary-treasurer of the Board and by him deposited as directed by the Board. The Board shall pay from the fund thus established all of the expenses of the Board, including such as may be incident to investigation and criminal prosecution. It shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the Board at the end of each fiscal year and make a report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said auditor shall have free access to all books of accounts, papers, and records, of the said Board.

SEC. 22. The Board is hereby authorized and empowered to refuse to issue or to refuse to renew or to suspend or revoke any license or registration, after full hearing, for any one or more of the following reasons:

(a) Obtaining or attempting to obtain a license or registration by fraudulent misrepresentation.

(b) Conviction of a felony as shown by a certified copy of the record of the court of conviction.

(c) Violations of the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia relating to the burial or disposal of dead human bodies or the provisions of this act or of the rules and regulations promulgated under authority of this act.

(d) Upon proof satisfactory to the Board that a funeral director or an embalmer has employed someone not legally registered or licensed in any position or for any work for which a license or registration is herein required.

Before any license or registration shall be suspended or revoked for any of the reasons contained in this section the holder thereof shall be given notice in writing of the charge or charges against him and shall at a day specified in said notice, which shall be at least 5 days after the service thereof, be given a full hearing before the Board and the opportunity to produce testimony in his own behalf.

SEC. 23. Upon the revocation or suspension by the Board of any license issued by the Board, an appeal may be taken from such action of the Board to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia within 30 days from the day such license is formally revoked or suspended by the Board.

SEC. 24. The provisions of this act shall not apply to registered apprentices of a duly licensed funeral director or embalmer while serving their apprenticeships under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 13 and 17, respectively, of this act, or to any duly established and incorporated school of medicine in the District of Columbia, or to any officer or employee of the United States or the District of Columbia in the discharge of his official duties.

SEC. 25. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 26. The Board shall report annually to the Commissioners on or before the third Monday in January its proceedings under the provisions of this act for the preceding fiscal year with recommendations for such further legislation as may be necessary.

SEC. 27. The word "he" and the derivatives thereof, wherever the same occurs in this act, shall be construed so as to include the word "she" and derivatives.

SEC. 28. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, or requirement of this act is, for any reason, held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements thereof. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

SEC. 29. All acts or laws or any parts thereof inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby expressly repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, that concludes the District of Columbia for this afternoon.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, with House amendments, insist upon the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, Mr. SATTERFIELD, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. HANCOCK.

MEXICAN CLAIMS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 326, with Mr. RANKIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the amount of time which has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. At the end of the debate on Monday, May 20, when this measure was under consideration, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] had consumed 44 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had consumed 45 minutes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] has remaining 16 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has 15 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this so-called Mexican Claims Commission bill, S. 326, I want to state that there is not a single claim from the State of Wisconsin involved in this matter. I therefore have no personal interest in it, nor has any Representative from my State.

I was rather intrigued by the legal questions that arose out of this particular bill. When the debate was first had, I was inclined to be against the provisions of the bill and what it proposed to do. I want to state that after thorough examination of what the bill proposes and the law and facts behind it, I have reached the conclusion that it would be an unconscionable thing to defeat this bill.

Now, let us see just exactly what it proposes to do. It appears from the record that there are 122 claimants whose claims have been litigated and passed upon, representing 112 individuals and 10 corporations, coming from 22 different States throughout the Union. These people all had claims that were valid against the Government of Mexico. I am going to cite the claim of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., because that is the largest. It represents the status of all these claims, and what may be said in reference to it may be said in reference to all of the other claims.

The Illinois Central Railroad Co. in 1921 contracted to sell to the Government of Mexico, which was then operating the Mexican railways, 91 second-hand locomotives, which they reconditioned and delivered to the Government of Mexico. The contract provided for this reconditioning of the locomotives and their delivery on the Mexican side of the border, and the Mexican Government agreed to a down payment of $1,000,000 and to pay the balance of the purchase price in payments of $50,000 per month, with interest.

The railroad company carried out the terms of its contract with the Government of Mexico. The Mexican Government made two monthly payments, leaving a balance of approximately $1,400,000, with interest.

After those first two monthly payments were made the international situation between this Government and Mexico became chaotic and payments were suspended. Between 1921 and 1923 the railroad company was actively engaged in negotiations seeking the payment of the balance of their claim against the Mexican Government. Those negotiations were in progress, and I have had the benefit of examination of the correspondence and letters—which time will not permit me to read at this time—showing the active character of those negotiations right up to the time this treaty was negotiated on September 8, 1923. That treaty required the Illinois Central Railroad Co. and all other claimants to file their claims with this Commission. I want to point out to those people who have been wibbly-wobbly on this particular bill that after a study of the entire situation I cannot see how any person can come to any conclusion but that this treaty compelled claimants having legitimate claims against the Government of Mexico to surrender those claims into the hands of the United States Government. The treaty itself provides in its interpretation by the State Department that no individual could prosecute or espouse his claim before this Commission, and that the claim had to be prosecuted and had to be espoused in the name of the Government itself as a diplomatic matter. In fact, the claims as docketed before the Commission itself were in the name of the Government of the United States in behalf of the respective claimants.

The Illinois Central was barred from further consideration of its claim in private negotiation with the Government of Mexico and duly filed its claim with the Commission. Its claim was fully espoused by the United States Government. The Commission passed upon its claim and awarded that claim to the railroad company as well as to these other claimants. It then became the claim of the United States Government, and the United States Government prevented the Illinois Central Railroad Co. and these other claimants from doing a single thing about the collection of their claims. As a matter of fact, the representatives of the Mexican Government came here and wanted to settle their claim with the Illinois Central Railroad Co., offered a check of $100,000 down payment on a new agreement, but they were prevented by an opinion of the State Department from making any settlement on that basis as the State Department itself claimed that this claim became the claim of the United States Government. I say that under those circumstances if you will examine the facts and the law relative to this suit and not be carried away by any false argument that this is the claim of a corporation, as I was perhaps when it first came up, you will find that common decency, common justice, and fair dealing require that these claimants can collect their money in no other way. They should be paid, and this bill should pass. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we have been over this subject so often that it is an old story to some of us, but to some of you who perhaps have not paid close attention before certain things need to be said.

This bill creates a new precedent in the history of our country. For the first time in our history it is proposed that the United States Government shall pay the claims of its citizens against a foreign country. We are to pick out $3,000,000 of certain classes of Mexican claims and pay them in full, some of them with interest; whereas, we are to leave 850 claimants in other classes about whom nothing has been heard. Special claimants against Mexico under another treaty got 2.06 cents on the dollar. We make no such agreement with respect to the oil claims as this bill makes with respect to the claims that fall within its scope; nor do we give such preferential treatment to the claims against Panama where we have precisely the same sort of treaty. No such legislation has been passed to cover the Spanish claims amounting to $14,000,000; and Russian claims amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars have had no such treatment. The Brazilian claims have received no such treatment.

We are to do one of two things if this bill passes. Either we are setting up a special preferred class out of all of our citizens who have hundreds of millions of dollars due them from foreign governments, or we are saying to these American citizens that our Government will pay all of their claims. We should reject this theory altogether, for if we pass this bill we shall be adopting a precedent that will cost us billions of dollars.

The reason advanced for the establishment of such a precedent as this is because it is claimed these people were cut off from certain rights under this treaty, or by the State Department. One merely has to read the treaty, article IX, to find there is not a word in there that constitutes a legal obligation of our Government to pay these claims. There is no claim by the State Department that any legal obligation is created. If there were a legal obligation this legislation would not be necessary, because this is an authorization; and if authorization already existed we would not need to pass this authorization bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. If this bill is enacted into law the citizens of the United States will be forced to pay an American railroad company for locomotives that were delivered to the Mexican Government.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. SHORT. Is that a part of the good-neighbor policy?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is the version of it that is suggested here.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman tell me why they waited 20 years to collect this bill or to file this claim?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As far as the Illinois Central Railroad is concerned, they have not slept on their rights. Understand, they have a just claim against the Government of Mexico and they tried to collect, just as thousands of other American citizens have just claims against the Government of Mexico. But there are thousands of others who have admittedly just claims against the Spanish Government. I have a constituent who has an admittedly just claim against the Spanish Government. The State Department uses its good offices to attempt to get the money for them as for other American citizens. But what is proposed here is that the State Department shall pay the debts of Mexico 100 cents on the dollar, when we all know that they are not worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Does the gentleman know whether the United States Government has collected the money with which to pay these debts?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Oh, they have not collected any money. If they collect the money, article IX of the treaty provides that they shall immediately pay these claimants.

Mr. KITCHENS. And until the money is collected there is no need for making the American people pay the debt, is there?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. There certainly is not. There certainly is no justification for such procedure.

Mr. KITCHENS. So far as the gentleman knows, the Government of the United States is doing all it can to collect the money to pay these claims, is it not?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I would not say they were doing all they could. They are taking many steps, but I do not feel that our Government has used as much diplomatic pressure as it should. Our Government, however, is taking the same steps for these people that they take for all other claimants against foreign governments; and these people are in no different position legally from other claimants.

Everyone who has studied this matter concedes that there is no legal obligation. If there were, no legislation would be necessary. It is said that we have a moral obligation because we entered into this treaty and because these people were urged by the State Department not to proceed in direct action. We have exactly the same moral obligation to thousands of claimants who have claims against other governments, to 850 Mexican claimants who will not be taken care of in this legislation. We have no more moral obligation to this group than we have to many others.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that under the terms of this treaty a private claimant was absolutely prohibited from prosecuting his claim individually against the Mexican Government?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is not the fact, and if the gentleman will read the testimony he will find that the Illinois Central had the power, after this treaty went into effect, to go ahead and carry out the settlement that was proposed, but the State Department said that they could not go ahead under the treaty. It is just as if a judge would say, "You can make a settlement out of court or you can insist on your rights in court, but you cannot do both." The testimony of the counsel for the Illinois Central Railroad Co. concedes it had the right to do one or the other. The fact that it chose to do one does not mean it did not have the right to proceed with a private settlement.

Mr. KEEFE. I hold in my hand copy of the letter from the State Department addressed to the agent of the Mexican Government who came here for the specific purpose of endeavoring to negotiate settlement with the Illinois Central Railroad Co., in which the State Department specifically states that they have no such power to make a settlement, that the claim had been turned over to the United States Government and any settlement that was made would have to be made through diplomatic channels. They were prevented from settling.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] when he said that he had been vigorously opposing this bill until he studied it and investigated the facts, when he came to the very definite conclusion that the bill had merit. When I read the speech of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] in the Senate of the United States I found he made exactly the same statement, that he had been opposing this bill until he studied it. I come now in this brief time allotted me to assert that any Member of this House who studies this bill carefully, together with the treaty upon which it is based, will give it his active support. I will even go further and say that but for the prejudice and the feeling that seems to have been developed in connection with the Illinois Central claim, this bill would have passed the House by unanimous consent.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] says this would be establishing a dangerous precedent. In view of the history of this matter, and the fact that diplomatic relations between the United States and Mexico had been severed, and in view of the further fact that President Harding, acting through his able Secretary of State, Mr. Kellogg, and that very brilliant lawyer who was Under Secretary of State, Mr. Cotton, when they entered into this solemn treaty and agreement, if this Government now refuses to pay its honest debts, it would be setting a dangerous precedent. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I happen to live in El Paso, on the Mexican border. I have more than 350 miles of the Mexican border along the Rio Grande in my district; therefore I speak with some personal knowledge of the situation. I hold no brief for the Illinois Central Railroad, because it has friends on this floor to speak for it. I am pleading for the 112 individuals, scattered throughout 22 States, whose claims have been approved by this Government and who have only their representatives here to speak for them. A large number of them live in my own city and district.

American citizens have been shot in my own city by stray bullets coming from Juarez when the revolution was going on there. American citizens residing in my district but doing business in Mexico have suffered physical injury in their revolutions down there, and also sustained heavy financial losses through no fault of their own. They were innocent of any wrongdoing. They sought redress; and our State Department, acting in conjunction with the Department of State of the Republic of Mexico, entered into a solemn agreement to settle these claims. Our citizens could not collect from the Mexican Government, and this method was their only recourse. The only thing in this world they could do was to come before this Commission and prove their claims, which they have done in a legal and proper way. This was an impartial commission appointed by President Harding and Secretary of State Kellogg. The awards were made after a fair and judicial hearing. This bill is both equitable and just.

The gentleman from Arkansas asked the question if we were not paying this money ourselves and then looking to Mexico for payment. Of course, we have not paid the more than $400,000 that has been allotted to Mexican citizens. But this is a treaty and solemn promise to adjudicate. Our citizens have no other recourse. Many of the individual claimants are getting old and in need of their money. They have waited for nearly 20 years, and this bill ought to pass.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to myself.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a new proposal. This Mexican claims bill has been kicking around Congress for years and years. It would not have gotten this far if it had not been for one of the most efficient and astute lobbies that has been around the Congress of the United States in the last 20 years. The State Department itself says that this legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President. It is here simply because the Illinois Central has a claim for $2,000,000 out of the $3,000,000 involved in the bill. This lobby is backed by able Representatives in Illinois, some of whom have told me that this claim is lousy, but "we live on the Illinois Central Railroad and we have to support the bill. We do not think it has any merit to it whatever, but, of course, you understand our reasons."

Mr. McKEOUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOUGH. May I say that I live on the Illinois Central right-of-way and I am not going to support this bill.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is a little more courageous than some others. Perhaps the gentleman does not have as many voters as some others have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is an unfair statement for the gentleman from New York to make, and he knows better than that.

Mr. FISH. I heard the gentleman's speech.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I admitted that I live on the railroad.

Mr. FISH. I am not referring to the gentleman, I am referring to some Members who have told me in the very words that I used that they did not want to vote for it under any circumstances, but that the railroad runs through their district and it would be unwise politically if they did not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield for a brief question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it not true that every bill that exceeds the Budget also carries with it that same stereotyped recommendation, that it is not in accord with the President's program?

Mr. FISH. I defy the gentleman to show one member of this administration, and of the State Department particularly, which is naturally vitally interested in the creation of such a vicious precedent, who will state that he is for it. There is not a member of the State Department who, under any circumstances, would dare to say that he is for this bill creating such a dangerous and vicious precedent, which opens wide the Treasury doors for future raids, not of $3,000,000 but of $300,000,000, and maybe $1,000,000,000, which we would be bound to pay if you ever permit the establishment of such a precedent. I again say there is not a man in the State Department from the Secretary down who would ever dare approve this kind of legislation.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield for a brief question.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. This bill is the same one that has been filed all along, is it not?

Mr. FISH. Identically. Its advocates did not dare bring this bill up 2 years ago in the closing days of the session, because Mr. Snell, the minority leader, knew what it was and was prepared to battle it to the end. It has a way of turning up at the end of a session, due, I presume, to the pressure of the lobby.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. There is no change in the bill?

Mr. FISH. Not a word of change.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. There is no change to make a man change his vote, unless he is looking for votes from the Illinois Central?

Mr. FISH. I have already given my views on that.

Let me quote now the words of a very distinguished Member of the Senate, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], who is utterly impartial and not affected by this bill. He does not live on the Mexican border line, and he does not have the Illinois Central running through his district. He made a very careful study of the whole proposition and analyzed it in every possible way. He had more time to analyze it than the gentleman from Wisconsin, our new Member, who just told us that he had changed his view. Senator ADAMS said this in the Senate:

> Mr. President, there is no obligation legally. There is no obligation morally. If the Senate of the United States wants to vote to give private claimants against the Mexican Government three or four million dollars, the Senate may take the responsibility for it; but, in my judgment, it is impossible to deduce from the terms of the convention or the operations of the Commission an obligation, legal or moral.

That statement was made by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who studied the operations of the Commission and the wording of the convention.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY], a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and a very distinguished member, too, would have liked to be here today to speak on this issue. In his absence, however, he has turned over to me certain papers, including letters from two of the most distinguished international lawyers in America, John Bassett Moore and Edwin M. Borchard, men whose names are known throughout the length and breadth of this land. He wrote them about this bill to find out what they thought of it. I hold here a letter from Edwin M. Borchard, the well-known professor of international law at Yale, addressed to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]. It reads as follows:

> I have read the bill for the payment of claims against Mexico. I do not know whether it had already been enacted by the House.
> If it has not, I should think there were an infinite number of arguments against the passage of such a bill. The claimants are simply unfortunate in having Mexico as their debtor, but equally unfortunate are those American claimants who have Russia or Spain as their debtor. It seems to me that unless the Government wishes to exercise largesse and simply pay out money to get it into circulation, those Americans who have claims against Mexico are in no better position than those who have claims against other countries. In fact, in many respects they are less entitled to consideration.
> Their claims were decided under a protocol which dispensed with the local-remedy rule by which they were relieved of the obligation of showing that they had even attempted to apply for a local remedy. Many of these claims, therefore, I am confident, would not have standing in international law. The General Claims Commission merely sat as a reviewing body to review the legitimacy of a demand, just as if they were a superior Mexican court, not necessarily an international court. The precedent that this payment would establish, in view of the fact that there is no national quid pro quo, is, I think, somewhat unfortunate. The United States does not owe this money in equity but simply would step into the shoes of an insolvent debtor, Mexico, from whom the collection of these claims, is, at the moment, highly problematical.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. If a precedent is set by paying this claim, will it not cost the taxpayers of this Government hundreds of millions of dollars eventually?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is unquestionably correct. Any Member of Congress has a perfect right to go home and try to defend himself after he votes for the payment of this $3,000,000 owed by the Mexican Government, but it is only the beginning. If we pay these claims and establish this precedent claimants will come to the Congress asking for not $3,000,000 but $300,000,000 and maybe $1,000,000,000 before we are through with it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Did the gentleman hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] some time ago explain the purposes of this bill?

Mr. FISH. I have been on the committee that has had this bill under consideration for the last 10 years.

Mr. PITTENGER. They reached a conclusion absolutely opposite to that of the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I have studied this matter a long time. I think it is unconscionable. This bill should never be here. In my opinion, it is nothing but a political racket. Further, I say it is a political steal and raid on the Treasury. I do not propose to go back to my district and try to defend my vote for giving certain people $3,000,000 owed them by the Government of Mexico. [Applause.]

Mr. PITTENGER. What is the answer of the gentleman from New York to the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time, which I believe is 5 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has characterized this bill in pretty extreme terms and has assigned to some unnamed Members of the House of Representatives unworthy motives. I shall not indulge in that type of argument. Did I believe this bill to be a steal, I would most certainly not support it, and whether the Illinois Central runs through my district or not makes no difference whatsoever with respect to my opinion of this measure. Incidentally, it does not run through my district, if that is of any importance whatsoever to the Members of the House here present. [Laughter.]

Much has been said here already about the establishment of a precedent, and allusions have been made to moneys confessedly owed to American citizens by the Government of Russia, to the failure of the Brazilian Government to back up its bonds—I think that is one of the cases mentioned—to the oil seizures in Mexico, and various other claims of one sort or another that American citizens might well bring against foreign governments, but in none of those cases was a treaty such as this treaty entered into between the United States Government and the foreign government.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman is mistaken in that statement. We had a similar provision in the old Mexican treaty of 1868; we had the same provision in a special treaty, and we have one in the treaty with Panama containing the same language as article IX, upon which the claims are based here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Panama case was not cited by the gentleman from Ohio in his speech. The cases which he did cite are not covered by treaties of this kind, and yet he says they are on all fours with this; they are not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is said that this treaty did not deprive any of these American claimants of their rights; that they could have gone ahead and pressed their claims against the Mexican Government as individual American citizens. A reading of a certain article of this treaty shows the complete inaccuracy of that statement. Article VIII of the convention provides that claims not so filed with the Commission should "be considered and treated as fully settled, barred, and thenceforth inadmissible." This crowded out every American claimant from individually presenting his claim. He had to come in under the United States Government tent. If he did not do so in 1 year or 6 months, whichever it was, after the reaching of this agreement, he was barred forever afterward from pressing his claim against the Mexican Government.

Now, a treaty is the supreme law of the land, and it is just as binding on an individual American citizen as it is upon the officials of the American Government. So these men were rendered absolutely helpless. They had to come under the Government tent. The Government of the United States, if the spirit of this thing is to be lived up to, became the creditor in its dealings with the Mexican Government, and the treaty provided for a balancing of the account between the two governments, not between the two sets of claimants, Americans on the one side and Mexicans upon the other.

As I read this thing, and I cannot pretend to be an authority on international law—I suspect that Mr. Borchard never read this treaty, judging by the letter which he wrote to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] as read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. He does not point out that this treaty stands out distinct as compared with the ordinary treaty for the arbitration of claims as between governments or as between the nationals of several governments. As I do study this thing I cannot escape the conclusion that in common fairness to the American citizens whose claims have been adjudged to be just, whose claims have been handled by the United States Government to the exclusion of their handling them themselves, which Government is to strike a balance with the Mexican Government, these American claims should be paid. These people have been waiting for years and years. No one on this floor will question the justness of their claims. The claim as a whole is lodged against the Mexican Government, and its prosecution is in the hands of the American Government. It is the duty of the American Government to collect. It is the only agency that is permitted to collect under the terms of this treaty. These individuals, be they the Illinois Central Railroad or John Smith, never can collect. It is only the Government of the United States that can collect, and in view of the power vested in the Government of the United States to perform this function, it seems that the time has come at last, if it shall ever come, when these poor Americans should be given decent treatment.

To my mind, this is not a steal, and I am not afraid to go back to the people who live in the Thirty-ninth Congressional District of New York and say why I voted for this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the principal amounts of all awards in favor of citizens of the United States against the United Mexican States heretofore made by the Commissions established by the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, and extensions thereof, on claims presented under said convention, plus interest stipulated in any such award and accruing up to the date of such award, and the principal amounts of all appraisals of such claims in favor of citizens of the United States heretofore made by the Commissioners appointed by the United States and Mexico for said purpose pursuant to the protocol of April 24, 1934, and agreed upon in their report, plus interest stipulated in any such appraisal and accruing up to the date of said report, shall be paid immediately by the Government of the United States to the person or persons entitled to the same, and that, appropriations for such payment of all such awards and agreed appraisals, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, be, and hereby are, authorized: Provided, That the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury all such awards and appraisals, whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the amounts to be paid on each in conformity with this act, and shall designate the person or persons entitled to receive such payments: Provided further, That, when the person or persons entitled to receive any such payments have received same on any such award or appraisal, such person or persons will be deemed to have consented to all of the provisions of this act, and all of the rights and interests of such person or persons in and to such award or appraisal, and the respective claim to which it pertains, will be deemed to have been fully satisfied and paid, and said award or appraisal, and the claim to which same pertains, and all of the rights and interests of such person or persons in respect thereto, shall be held to have been assigned to the United States to be enforced by and on behalf of the United States against the United Mexican States: And provided further, That awards and appraisals authorized to be paid by this act shall be included in the final settlement between the Governments of the United States of America and the United Mexican States under the said convention of September 8, 1923; and the payment of any award or appraisal under this act shall not be construed as the satisfaction, in whole or in part, of any such award or appraisal, or as extinguishing or diminishing the liability of the United Mexican States for the satisfaction in full of such awards and appraisals, but shall be considered only as an advance by the United States until all of said awards and appraisals have been paid off and satisfied in full to the United States by the United Mexican States.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BEAM moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, great stress has been laid by the proponents of this measure upon the fact that when the Illinois Central Railroad and the other claimants submitted their claims to arbitration, as requested by the Government, they were foreclosed and estopped from trying to proceed with the collection of their respective claims. This, however, is not the fact, as supported by the evidence in the case; and in this regard I read from the testimony of Mr. Vernon Foster, general solicitor of the Illinois Central Railroad in respect to that question. I quote from his testimony appearing on page 37 of the hearings, which is as follows:

They said, "If you propose to do anything of that sort, you will have to do one of two things. You will have to waive your right to have any aid from the United States and abandon this claim before the Commission in its entirety, and we will consent to the petition being dismissed, or we will dismiss it in any event; or, as a corollary to that, if you do not do that, you will have to cease all private negotiations." Well, of course, having had this unfortunate experience before of having sent the locomotives down there and they made the one payment, we were faced with the thought they would try to make one payment again and then we would be forever barred.

In other words, the Government gave them the choice of pursuing their claim in their own capacity if they so desired, but from their prior experience it was obvious to them that as an individual corporation they could not accomplish their purpose.

This thought is further suggested in the printed brief of Mr. O. M. Fitzhugh, attorney for H. G. Venable, claimant for the amount of $140,000. Speaking on the same proposition, the following appears in page 5 of his printed brief, which I quote:

> But the State Department of the American Government refused to approve such a settlement except on condition that the railroad company waive the right thereafter to have the aid of our Government on that claim if Mexico should default.

In other words, the Illinois Central Railroad and all the other claimants wanted to avail themselves of the power, prestige, and influence of the Government of the United States, and they were unwilling to proceed on their own prerogative.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. No; I am sorry; I have not the time. Referring to the speech of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], I desire to say that no proponent of the measure has denied the fact that 18 different appropriations aggregating $3,425,000 have been passed by the Congress of the United States in the prosecution of these claims in behalf of its citizens. No proponent of this measure has denied the fact that only 124 claims are involved in this pending bill, while 850 claims of the same type and character are foreclosed and denied. No one has disputed the fact that there are now pending against the Government of Mexico American claims, adjudicated and determined but still unsatisfied, aggregating between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. Why should we pick out 124 privileged claims, giving them a preferred status, and say to the taxpayers of the Nation you have to pay for them. It is not fair, it is not just, it is not equitable.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot conceive by the broadest scope of the imagination anything more academic or more ironical than the Congress of the United States at this crucial period in the history of the world giving consideration to legislation of this character pregnant with probabilities so devastating and demoralizing to the economic well-being of America as are embodied and contained in this measure before you at the present time.

With brave and determined men fighting for the preservation of freedom and liberty for millions of people throughout the world; with the democracy of the world imperiled and our own peace and security perhaps in jeopardy; instead of devising ways and means of increasing and enlarging our national defense and rendering our country impregnable to any foreign attack, we take the time of the Congress of the United States in the closing days of the session in debating upon this measure, whose only design is to precipitate and bring about the most colossal raid upon the Treasury of the United States in the history of our Government.

When the Congress of the United States by the passage of this measure calls upon the taxpayers of the Nation to pay the bill for 95 locomotives sold by the Illinois Central Railroad to the Mexican Government, at a profit, and 123 other privileged claimants, I fear the ultimate result and consequences of this unwarranted and unjust taxation upon the morale of our citizens at this crucial period of our national history.

I beseech you in the name of the farmers of America, in behalf of the great mass of toilers throughout the land, and all patriotic citizens of our Nation, whose shoulders are now becoming weary with the tremendous tax burdens they are now bearing, and in the trying and uncertain days ahead, will be greatly enlarged and increased by appropriations necessary to preserve our national integrity and maintain our country at peace with the world.

In the name of the taxpayers of America, this bill must be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, the argument by some gentlemen opposing this bill, that it is a steal, is unworthy of the gentlemen who make the charge. It is a characterization sometimes used by those whose causes will not wash. This bill is not a steal, and the gentlemen who make those statements, if they knew the facts, if they had read and studied the provisions of this bill and the terms of the treaty upon which it is based, would not have the hardihood to look into the faces of the membership of this House and make such an unfounded, unjustified charge.

There has been some feeling generated in this debate. I have none myself. I am actuated solely by what I conceive to be right and wrong with reference to this bill. I do not have a single constituent who gets a dime of this money. If one will stop and lay aside his prejudice and passion, and calmly and dispassionately consider this resolution, he will reach but one conclusion, and that is that the bill is meritorious. It has twice passed the Senate of the United States. It has never been voted upon in the House.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I want to say that in the service I have had in the House of Representatives with the gentleman from Texas, I have never found him supporting bills that were not meritorious and entitled to support. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota, and so far as the claim of the Illinois Central is concerned, which has been criticized because of its large amount, the gentleman who has just spoken knows that the smallest bill which ever passed this House was introduced by me in behalf of a poor old colored man for $5, and it was on account of his son who had died in the service of the Navy. It was necessary to pass a bill in order to get this $5 for the old man. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] was a member of the Claims Committee who reported that bill. He knows there was no political influence involved. It was simply a question of right and wrong, just as is involved in this measure.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. There were claims allowed in favor of Mexican citizens against our Government. Can the gentleman tell the membership whether or not the Government has paid those claims?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. They have not been paid.

Mr. HALLECK. Does it not follow from that that the claims of American citizens against the Mexican Government that are here sought to be paid are the basis of the refusal or failure of our Government to pay the Mexican claimants?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman is right. There are two sets of claims. The claims of Mexican citizens against our Government and claims of our citizens against the Mexican Government. Under the Commission set up claims of citizens of both countries were to be passed upon by the Commission and the Government paying the larger sum would collect from the other country the difference between the aggregate awards of each group of citizens.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it not fair to say that our Government has taken the claims of its citizens and used them to pay its obligation to Mexican citizens?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think that is a fair conclusion.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman tell the House whether or not the agreement did not provide that the claims of one country should be deducted from the claims of the other?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. And then the other country should pay the balance?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. That is true.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, did not the Mexican Government owe more than the United States Government?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Surely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, does that not put it in a different light than was brought out by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The terms of the treaty, as I interpret it, is this: That the Commission will hear the claims of both sets of claimants, and after those claims have been adjudicated, then each Government will pay to their citizens, and the Government that pays most will collect from the other Government the difference.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman know of any other instance where an agency trying to make collection assumed payment of the obligation before he had collected?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I say this treaty so provided. Whether there had ever been any other treaty in the world like it or not makes no difference; that is what this treaty provides, and this bill seeks to carry out the terms of that treaty.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I would like to say that I have heard this bill criticized as "a steal." Because of that I took the pains to examine it rather thoroughly, and if I have competence and understanding to know what is right and just, then this bill is a righteous measure and ought to be adopted.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is one of the ablest Members of the House. He has a brilliant and analytical mind and is a fair-minded man. This is also true of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who were both first opposed to the bill, but after study of it were convinced that it was meritorious. And the same conclusion will be reached by anyone who will familiarize himself with the bill and the terms of the treaty upon which it is based, and will lay aside whatever passion and prejudice he may have. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEAM) there were ayes 60 and noes 62.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BLOOM and Mr. BEAM to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 68 and noes 93.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 2, line 6, after the word "States", insert "after these sums have been deposited with the United States Treasury by the Government of Mexico."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in and willing to protect American interests in America, but I do not believe in going to the extent that if American interests invest their money in foreign countries, make deals with citizens of foreign countries to do certain things, the American Government and the American taxpayers back in my district have got to bail them out of a bad bargain and pay their bills. I do not think there is anything the American people would shudder at more than the thought that we were going to protect our American citizens in every deal they made with a citizen of another country, and say to them in this instance that they could go into Mexico, sell their goods, wares, and merchandise and if they could not collect, that we would protect them against loss and that Uncle Sam will pay the bill. What can be more ridiculous than that?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield for a minute, then I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Chairman, if I were going to sell woolen goods to the people of Mexico I would expect my credit department to look into the standing of my prospective customers to the extent that I would know whether they were worth-while debtors. And if I shipped merchandise to them and was unable to get my money I am telling you I would not have the gall or the nerve to come back here and ask Congress to get my money from your taxpayers because I was not businessman enough to get it out of those fellows myself when I sold them the merchandise.

I do not believe the American Government, the American taxpayers, the American people are going to say to any railroad company or individual manufacturer in this country that he or it sells merchandise to the citizen of a foreign country and is unable to get his money the Government would do it for him, that Uncle Sam would go down into an empty Treasury deeper and deeper and heap that indebtedness on the backs of generations of children yet unborn—to pay the debts owed certain business concerns in this country who by their own efforts and judgment did not take the precautionary measures to get the money when they made the deal. It is not good business for Congress to do so.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield, briefly.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. This bill is simply an effort to force the American taxpayers to pay the bad debts of Mexico, is it not?

Mr. RICH. Yes; you are correct. It is ridiculous for our Government to pay the bad debts of any nation. It is ridiculous for this Government to pay the bad debts of foreign individuals. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that we should not pay these debts until the Mexican Government places the money in Uncle Sam's Treasury. Then let the Treasury pay it out. That is one way to get the money.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that some of these claims do not fall within the category of ordinary commercial transactions but arise through acts of banditry and aggression committed by Mexicans upon American soil?

Mr. RICH. Most of them were committeed in Mexico. We are not responsible for the Mexican Government any more than we are responsible for the governments of Europe and what is going on in Europe today. I say, "Stay out of Europe, let them settle their own quarrels." I say, "Stay cut of Mexico and let Mexico run its Government and its business the way they think it ought to be run." It is none of our business how they run it as long as they do not interfere with our rights.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Is it not a fact that the total of the claims adjudicated in favor of Mexican citizens under this treaty against the United States Government is only $400,000, approximately? Yet against that we are seeking to compel the Treasury of the United States to offset an obligation of more than $3,000,000.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment is adopted. The Members should support it, because there is no use trying to pay these claims with money that is not collected. Be just to our taxpayers. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona and Mr. DIRSKEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona, a member of the committee, for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I heard the statement made a moment ago by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON], that these claims arise under a treaty and that the provisions of a treaty partake of the nature of constitutional provisions. This, therefore, is a sacred binding obligation upon us as Members of Congress to pass some such law to carry out this treaty. As Congressmen we took an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and that is done on our part by the way we vote in this Chamber. Since treaties are a part of the Constitution, we cannot keep our oath of office and by our vote here ignore or go contrary to a treaty.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal said about merchandise being sold down in Mexico and later a claim presented to Uncle Sam in payment for it. I want to point out that the gentleman from Wisconsin and others were exactly right in saying that many of these claims in this bill arose by reason of acts of banditry. You will recall that only a generation ago bandits came into our country from Mexico and did a great deal of damage, causing loss of life and property on our side of the border. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] a moment ago told us how he stood on the top of a high building in El Paso and saw war and revolution going on across the border. In southern Arizona there are several cities on, or nearly astride, the international line. Therefore the same thing applies along the border of Arizona even to a greater degree than in Texas. The Southern Pacific Railroad tracks run right along the border at the town of Naco and at other places in Arizona and trains have been within the range of gunfire from Mexican troops fighting on the other side. This explains some of my numerous requests of the Appropriations Committee handling military items.

Hundreds of my people have come out of Mexico stripped of all their property. I have seen them come into the border towns of Douglas, Bisbee, Nogales, and other towns in Arizona, having previously spent a lifetime and fortune in building up property in Mexico. They were American citizens, mind you, and they lost all they had in revolutions in Mexico. As the gentleman from Texas said, some of these are included in this claim. It may be that all claims have not been adjudicated. It may be that there are others to be adjudicated, but I want to say that all of these border States have suffered. Perhaps I have about a dozen constituents involved in the pending bill. There ought to be more. I do know that hundreds of my constituents in the State of Arizona have had lawful claims for a quarter century against Mexico for the loss of property, which claims have not been settled.

We want the good-neighbor policy to prevail. Our Government through its State Department takes this course. It is not good business for us to say to Mexico, "We are going to give you all the concessions. Our businessmen will come in and develop your resources, then at any time you wish you can declare a revolution and take their property without protest." If we pass this bill and do this act of justice to American claimants on our side of the line, it will have a wholesome and salutary effect on our officials in their attitude toward our relations with our southern neighbor to cause them to see to it that when American capital is invested down there that capital will be duly protected.

Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking for any railroad. I do not live along the Illinois Central and I know very little about the railroad's claim. I am speaking, however, for American businessmen who make investments in Mexico in good faith. I feel they are entitled to full protection. I speak also for hundreds of people, mostly of a religious faith, who migrated to Mexico 30 or 40 years ago and were driven out some 25 years ago by the Mexicans in revolt. These are the people who ought to be considered, and I ask favorable consideration for the pending bill and a voting down of the pending amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to the argument of my philosophical and shrewd business friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who seeks to put these claims on the same basis as a straight commercial claim. The difficulty with that is, first of all, you have a different background, and, secondly, these are founded upon and are settled by the conclusions of a treaty.

If you will go back to that period between 1910 and 1920, you will find there were depredations on the border running from the Mexican side to our side. They had virtually suspended diplomatic relations. They were killing off people. All sorts of violence was taking place on the Mexican border, and one of the economic results was that the customs were suspended so that there were no moneys accruing to the Treasury of the United States as a result of customs fees. Taking this whole cumulative situation of violence on the Mexican border, they decided they could bring it all to an end, restore a happy and a felicitous feeling to both nations, and restore a resumption of intercourse between both nations by entering into a claims convention, and they concluded a treaty. All claims that came within the purview of that period of years was resolved by the provisions of this treaty under article IX, by which they are to ascertain the amount of money due Mexican citizens from our country and due our citizens from the Mexican side, offsetting one against the other, and then paying in gold, either in Washington, D. C., or in Mexico City, the difference. That is all there is to it. Since it is ascertained by a treaty, obviously, it departs entirely from the settlement of a strictly commercial transaction. That is the answer to my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and it is the best answer I know of as to why the amendment he proposes to the pending bill at present should be voted down by an overwhelming and emphatic majority.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 67, noes 67.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. That is too close to be comfortable.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers, Mr. RICH and Mr. BLOOM.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 92, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this bill has boiled down to a very simple proposition, whether the Congress of the United States wants by their votes to bail out the Government of Mexico and pay to our claimants money owed by the Republic of Mexico. If that is the desire of Congress, of course, they have a right to do it, and do it for any other foreign nation after they have put this bill through. The reason the State Department will not approve it is that they know this will create the most vicious and dangerous precedent that could possibly be established. They know that from now on there will be one raid after another—perhaps the word "steal" is a little bit too strong, but "raid" certainly is not—it will cause one raid after another upon the Treasury of the United States if we ever establish this precedent today by our votes. I again say that this bill would never have reached the House in the last 4 or 5 years if it had not been for this lobby—the most effective, the most efficient, the most tireless and industrious lobby that I have known anything about in 20 years. If a lobby can thrust this bill upon the House and have the House create this precedent, then Lord have mercy upon the Treasury of the United States, because the Congress will not. It creates by this raid a precedent that opens wide the Treasury doors to all future and past claimants against foreign nations who will ask Congress to bail out all foreign nations and underwrite their debts.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Is it not a fact that the lobbyists on this matter are so thick they lobby each other?

Mr. FISH. I do not want to go any further into that, because if I do I may say some unhappy things; but it is the worst bill I have known in 20 years that has come before the Congress for their votes and would establish a dangerous and ruinous precedent.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is it not true that this bill is sponsored by Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD and has twice passed the Senate and has never been voted upon in the House, and does the gentleman think that a lobby extends over both Chambers?

Mr. FISH. I do not think there is any limit whatever to that lobby. It may even extend beyond the Senate and the House, but so far as Senator SHEPPARD and the gentleman himself are concerned, I naturally have the highest regard for the gentleman's integrity and for that of Senator SHEPPARD, who are sponsoring this bill in the Senate and the House, but that does not mean that this lobby has not been working like a mole day in and day out, and night in and night out, to try to get this legislation up in Congress. They have worked in this way for 10 years and when I tried to stop it in the Committee on Foreign Affairs and asked for reconsideration of the snap vote of the committee because I was out of the committee room temporarily, in the Chairman's room at the time, I could not get it.

Now, what is it all about? Three million dollars that we are to pay to bail out Mexico. Two million dollars for the Illinois Central. For what? For a claim 30 years old, with whiskers on it. For what? For second-class or second-hand locomotives or engines; not brand-new engines, but second-hand engines. Now, after 30 years and the strenuous efforts by an expert lobby, we are supposed to put our stamp of approval on it. That is why it is here, and I am not going to challenge anybody's right to vote because that is what you are here to do. You are here to legislate any way you want to, and it will not hurt my opinion of any Member how he votes except I want the Members to know about this particular item for second-hand locomotives, 30 years old, that we are supposed to pay for in order to bail out for the Republic of Mexico, that has been spitting in our faces for years and refuses to arbitrate and, literally, attacks Secretary Hull in every effort he makes to get some settlement of the expropriated or seized lands in Mexico right at the present time. So the whole thing boils down to one thing: Are we to pay the debts of Mexico to our own citizens? I have as much sympathy for these claimants as any Member of the House, and they are generally just claims against Mexico, but not against the United States Treasury. I would like to see them paid as much as anybody in the House, but I do not propose to put my stamp of approval on creating any such vicious and dangerous precedent that would open wide the Treasury door this year and hereafter, not for $3,000,000, but for hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, and not one person in authority in the State Department approves or dares to approve any such ruinous principle as that laid down in this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, boiled down to one simple little fact, this bill provides something like this: All the United States Government did in this transaction was to provide a means for the collecting of debts owing to United States nationals by Mexicans and the Mexican Government. You may call it a collecting agency if you wish. It is hardly that. I do not believe that the United States Government even meant to go that far in setting up this arrangement, but at any rate here is the basic and the underlying fact in this whole matter. There was no other way for the American citizens to collect their bills except an arrangement of this kind. The Government set this arrangement up and said, "We will do what we can to facilitate the collection of these debts from Mexico." That is all the obligation the Government of the United States had in this matter.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that in all reason this claim that the Illinois Central is trying to collect was written off by the Illinois Central years ago, and we are just handing them out some velvet?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Practically speaking, probably so.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Where is the proof of that fact?

Mr. FISH. I know something about these claims.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is just speculating without any information about it.

Mr. FISH. I knew about this claim 20 years ago.

Mr. BLOOM. I think that statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is unfair. The gentleman does not know whether it is written off or not.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Let us go a little bit further. Suppose I employed one of you here to collect accounts which I had outstanding and you failed to bring in any money. What would you tell me if I demanded that you pay out of your own pocket the sums which you tried to collect for me? You would tell me plenty, would you not?

But the proposal before us is even more absurd than this. As stated, it was only by the arrangement of setting up a claims commission under the jurisdiction of our Government that it was possible for our nationals to collect their accounts from Mexico. Fundamentally the purpose of this Commission was to collect from Mexico and to pay over to our citizens such sums as it collected. This was the sole and only function of this Commission. Then, having failed in making the desired collections, the United States claimants jump onto their own Government and ask our taxpayers to pay the sums this Commission failed to collect from Mexico.

How any Congressman who supports this measure can go back to his district and try to defend his action is hard for me to understand.

Mr. THOMASON. And when the treaty was agreed to, were not the claimants foreclosed from further asserting their claims directly against the Government of Mexico, and this is the only recourse they have?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The State Department informed me about 10 minutes ago that that is not their version of this.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. And furthermore that is not the version of the Illinois Central Railroad, as shown by their own counsel, who said that they had a choice of two things. He said the State Department told him:

> You will have to waive your right to have any aid from the United States or abandon this claim before the Commission in its entirety, and we will consent to the petition being dismissed, or we will dismiss it in any event; or as a corollary to that, if you do not do that you will have to cease all private negotiations.

They had the choice of going ahead alone or with the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The presumption was by all concerned when this arrangement was established, that the money would have to be paid first by the Mexicans and then handed over to our American citizens, and I do not think that can be denied.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins will he yield to me?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to read something from the record to show that the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] is not exactly accurate according to the opinion of the State Department. Before the Committee on Foreign Affairs the following colloquy occurred between Mr. Hackworth, the legal adviser of the State Department, and me:

Mr. BLOOM. Would you mind an interruption there? Of course, the Secretary of State, if this Commission should report this bill favorably, would approve of it. He does not disapprove of any action we take. He has no objection to us doing that?

Mr. HACKWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. BLOOM. There is no reason he has at the present time why we should not pass this bill favorably?

Mr. HACKWORTH. No, sir; not as I understand it.

Mr. Hackworth is the legal adviser of the State Department. He made the further statement at that time:

We have taken over the claims and are prosecuting them as Government claims on behalf of our nationals. The Government is the creditor.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, supplementing what the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], has read from the hearings in respect to what Mr. Hackworth, legal adviser to the State Department, said concerning the claims becoming the claims of the Government rather than the claims of the individuals, I want to deny most emphatically the charge made by some that Secretary Hull made an adverse report on this resolution. Prior to the time that the Commission had gone out of existence, the State Department did report adversely, but Secretary Hull said that after the life of the Commission expired and after these claimants had had to wait for a great many years to collect their claims, he made no recommendation one way or the other with reference to it. Whereas prior to that time there had been an adverse report, I call attention to this further statement. Some of those speaking against the bill have said that the Illinois Central Railroad had the right to prosecute their claim, as they would like, but there is in the record a statement of the State Department that these claimants no longer have the claims; that they became the claims of the Government of the United States. The Illinois Central Railroad as such sought to have a settlement with the Government of Mexico. A representative of the road and a representative of the Mexican Government came to Washington, an offer of settlement having been made to the railroad by the Mexican Government, and they came to consult the State Department as to whether or not a settlement could be made between the road and the Mexican Government. The files of the State Department disclose a copy of a letter dated March 17, 1926, signed by Henry W. Anderson, agent of the United States, to Benito Flores, agent for the United Mexican States. He says, after conferring with the Secretary of State, that that could not be done; that the settlement could not be made with the Illinois Central Railroad and the Mexican Government, because the claims no longer were the claims of the individuals, but were the claims of the Government of the United States against the Mexican Government.

That is the milk in the coconut, and that is the real test of it, and this claim under that treaty became a claim of the Government, and under the treaty it is the duty of the Government to collect it and pay the claimants the awards made in their favor. All that we ask in this bill is to carry out the terms of the treaty, which is just and equitable, and the bill is not subject to the attacks that have been made upon it nor to the interpretations nor the insinuations that have been thrust against it. The bill simply does justice to the claimants, who have long been denied the money that is due them under awards made by a Government agency, and no one need fear voting for this bill and then facing their constituents, because when you vote for it you will only do what is right as between the Government of the United States and its citizens. To vote against the bill would be denying to these claimants the rights that are theirs, and it would be an unjust procedure upon the part of the Government to take away from the claimants the right to collect claims and then to deny them the money which is justly theirs, and which has been awarded them after due and legal process set up by our Government under the treaty with Mexico. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANKIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee has had under consideration the bill S. 326, and he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FISH. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FISH moves to recommit the bill S. 326 to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: "Page 2, line 6, after the word 'States', insert 'after these sums have been deposited with the United States Treasury by the Government of Mexico.' "

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. An identical amendment was voted upon in Committee of the Whole, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The SPEAKER. That was an amendment which was offered in Committee of the Whole, the Chair will state. The House takes no judicial notice of action in Committee of the Whole or the rejection of an amendment in the Committee. The point of order is overruled.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 103, noes 88.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.
